APPLICATION INFORMATION

Title: Public Knowledge

Grant period: From 2017-04-01 to 2019-03-30

Project field(s): Arts, General

Description of project: SFMOMA is planning a new initiative entitled Public Knowledge which will convene artists, humanities scholars and diverse communities in an extended public inquiry into the cultural impact of urban change. The initiative will produce a series of public programs and publishing outputs extending over more than two years. Public Knowledge will be organized in collaboration with the San Francisco Public Library and will take place primarily at library branches in San Francisco's neighborhoods, at a time when the city is undergoing profound changes to its public culture, brought about by the rapid growth of the technology industry. The goal of Public Knowledge is to: connect knowledge and understanding from the humanities to current conditions of urban change in US cities; encourage public dialogue, via the humanities, on the cultural impact of urban change; and create compelling and accessible ways to present this dialogue through the work of SFMOMA artists dedicated to public engagement.

Public Knowledge
Application Narrative

A) Abstract

SFMOMA's new initiative Public Knowledge will convene artists, humanities scholars and diverse neighborhood communities in an extended public engagement into the cultural impact of urban change. The initiative will produce a series of public programs centered on four large-scale Artist Projects in consultation with eight scholarly advisors from April 2017 through March 2019. Public Knowledge will be organized in collaboration with the San Francisco Public Library and will take place primarily at neighborhood branches. At a time when the city is undergoing profound changes to its public culture brought about by the rapid growth of the technology industry, Public Knowledge aims to: connect information and understanding from the humanities to current conditions of urban change; encourage public dialogue via the humanities on its cultural impact; and create compelling and accessible ways to present and record this dialogue through the work of artists dedicated to public engagement.

B) Nature of the request

The San Francisco Museum of Modern Art (SFMOMA) seeks a Community Conversations grant in the amount of $400,000, plus $60,000 to support a Position in Public Humanities, to develop and implement an extended public engagement that convenes artists, humanities scholars and diverse communities in an innovative set of programs around the cultural impact of urban change.

SFMOMA reopened in 2016 at the center of a city that is changing in intense ways, and in a region that is redefining, through technological innovation, what knowledge is, how it is produced, and how it is circulated. These related shifts have a distinct reality in the San Francisco Bay Area but also have national and even global consequences. Public Knowledge will explore these changes in collaboration with the San Francisco Public Library (SFPL), at SFMOMA, and at five library branches in San Francisco's neighborhoods.

The first major initiative of SFMOMA's new curatorial area, Public Dialogue, Public Knowledge is comprised of four multi-disciplinary Artist Projects conducting collaborative research, presenting public talks and events, and exhibiting their findings at SFPL branches. Community conversations and workshops will be organized around five key humanities themes and will lead to a major public forum in September 2018. All public programs and content will be free to access.

The partnership between the museum and the library enables Public Knowledge to convene and spur dialogue around the central theme of contemporary urban change using the resources and visibility of two of San Francisco's most enduring institutions of public culture. Public Knowledge will explore the possibilities for a museum's infrastructure and a public library system to together become sites not only for inclusive discussion but also for the production of new knowledge and for collaborative, creative research beyond the traditional scope of their institutions' collection of objects.

Taking as its basic methodology the idea of dialogue as a creative process, Public Knowledge will also facilitate public conversations around the project's other related themes: the role of public libraries and museums in our rapidly changing cities; the effects of digital technologies on knowledge circulation; the cultural history of technological innovation and the relevance of public engagement in contemporary art. One of the central aims for Public Knowledge is to provide audiences and participants with ideas and resources that leave them better placed to participate in the public discourse around San Francisco's changing urban and civic fabric.

Support for Public Knowledge from the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH) will enable SFMOMA to: connect knowledge and understanding from the humanities to current conditions of urban change in US cities; encourage public dialogue and stimulate critical reflection, via the humanities, on the cultural impact of urban change; and create compelling and accessible ways to present this dialogue and reflection through the work of SFMOMA artists dedicated to public engagement.

San Francisco Museum of Modern Art
Public Knowledge
Application Narrative

SFMOMA seeks additional support toward a position in public humanities to liaise planning meetings with eight participating scholars and numerous partner organizations, aggregate and publicly disseminate research, and coordinate the content of the scholars' involvement in public programs and publications. In addition to the Public Knowledge scholars, each Artist Project will have 2-4 scholars making up a more project specific Advisory Team. The Public Humanities Fellow would also help coordinate with this group. In this way, this role would enable the sustained involvement of the participating humanities scholars engaged in Public Knowledge.

Public Knowledge responds to the NEH area of interest The Common Good: The Humanities in the Public Square by addressing an urgent and pervasive issue in national public life, and creating multiple, sustainable opportunities for ideas and questions from the humanities to be brought to bear on the complexities of that issue, for diverse audiences, by public scholars from a range of humanities disciplines.

C) Humanities content

In the San Francisco Bay Area a booming technology industry has led to increasing inequality, hyper-gentrification, privatization of public resources, new forms of exclusion, and a rapid remaking of the urban environment.

In 2015 San Francisco ranked second in the nation in income inequality¹. The number of eviction notices filed per month with the San Francisco Rent Board was up 32% compared with the previous three years' average, and owner move-in evictions went up 131% in the same period². Meanwhile the average one bedroom rental hit $3,670 in October of 2015³. The changes are so fast and so deep that it is hard for those most affected to interpret and respond to their impact on public culture. San Francisco may be an extreme instance of this, but it is not unique. Its experience is reflected in other US cities and beyond.

Rising prices and unevenly distributed gains lead to greater difficulties for the underprivileged: a fraying sense of community as everyday life becomes precarious; the disappearance of an inclusive and diverse cultural ecology as non-profit organizations and cultural spaces are priced out; the loss of cultural memory for those without the means to represent themselves.

At this fraught moment for civic life in San Francisco, Public Knowledge seeks to make new connections between ideas, individuals and communities, responding to the idea from library science that "knowledge can be public, yet undiscovered, if independently created fragments are logically related but never retrieved, brought together and interpreted." (Swanson, 1986) Public Knowledge will offer multiple ways for individuals – from scholars to artists to individual audience members – to expand and share what they know in public, and to uncover what each other knows. This project is also concerned with 'public knowledge' in a second sense: "a meaning associated with the products of human intellectual activity, as encoded in the public record, rather than the contents of the human mind." (Swanson, 1996) In this sense, the initiative is an inquiry into the state of the record of public knowledge: what has been recorded, how a public can understand that record, contribute to it, and use it to yield new discoveries and insights.

Public Knowledge looks to critically and creatively explore this overarching theme:

San Francisco Museum of Modern Art
Public Knowledge
Application Narrative

Changes to the built environment of a city are accompanied by changes to its cultural life. San Francisco is now home to very different types of cultural institution: both old and new, public and private. The Main Library branch of the SFPL can now count the headquarters of Twitter and Uber as neighbors, while SFMOMA sits between LinkedIn and Yelp. How can such different organizations shape the culture of a city for the better? And as communities of artists and their audiences are displaced and cultural spaces (such as music venues, independent bookstores and art galleries) disappear, how can the organic cultural life of a city, and its memory, be supported? Public Knowledge will provide opportunities for community members to work with humanities scholars and artists to interpret the cultural changes taking place in San Francisco and to learn together how a community-level cultural activity and public life may be sustained or rebuilt. Participants will draw upon the cultural history of San Francisco and well as on policies and practices from other cities in the Americas.

Four further themes are embedded in the artists' projects, the scholars' work and the public programs, informing the research and discussion:

2. The effect of digital technologies on the circulation of knowledge

Public Knowledge also explores about the role of institutions of public culture. Historically museums and libraries have been responsible for representing and circulating ideas, understood as a public utility. In some ways, this responsibility has been absorbed by private technology companies, involving new modes of circulation now prevalent online. Yet these new institutions of public culture create new exclusions as well as new forms of access. They also alter the nature of public and private knowledge. These changes effect the role of libraries and museums in the circulation of knowledge. Just as libraries have become digital as well as physical repositories, and are now increasingly spaces for making and training (especially training in technology skills), museums have created online galleries and publications, and go outside their walls to display, produce, and interpret art in partnership with schools and other institutions. Public Knowledge seeks to share current ideas on this topic with its participant groups, including from the digital humanities. Through the work of scholars and artists, participating communities will learn how digital technology can support the creation and sharing of 'civic data', information that supports civic participation.

3. The evolving civic role of public libraries and museums in American cities

Historically, beyond their role in representing and circulating ideas, libraries and museums have been part of the core infrastructure of public culture in the U.S. Through their pursuit of democratic access, even if imperfectly realized, they have been workshops for citizenship, communal gathering places, and pillars of public life. Responding to both technological and social changes, these institutions are finding new ways to advance their civic purpose. In 2009, SFPL became the first public library in the U.S. to hire a full-time social worker, recognizing its function as a haven for the indigent and homeless population in its immediate neighborhood (made more vulnerable by the local economic boom and recent evictions). Public Knowledge brings the history of these institutions to new audiences, in the context of intense urban change. By focusing on library audiences' love of lifelong learning, the aim is to nurture a community conversation about the cultural and civic role of libraries and museums today and in the future. Meanwhile, "museums are investigating the nature of 'public engagement' as an essential part of their ethos and identity," said advising scholar Shannon Jackson, describing Public Knowledge's innovative model for artist projects to use multiple infrastructures as sites and also as inspiration and subject for art. "It is truly a cross-sector collaboration that's embedding art in a wide network of social spaces, and using the public library as a kind of delivery system for art and also, perhaps, changing people's perception of what a library is."⁴

San Francisco Museum of Modern Art

4. The complex cultural history of technological innovation

San Francisco contains conflicting characteristics. Despite its history of championing progressive and civic values, it is one of the most unequal cities in the United States today, with the visible poverty as striking to a visitor as the evidence of new wealth. The divisions in San Francisco today often appear to be cultural as well as economic. The values of the technology industry seem to be at odds with those of artist communities and their audiences; the former being individualistic and disruptive, the latter being oriented to social cohesion and sustainability. However, histories of Northern California since the 1960s (for example: Fred Turner, From Counterculture to Cyberculture, Chicago UP, 2006) can reveal that San Francisco's distinctive and differing tendencies have common cultural origins. Public Knowledge seeks to understand the intertwined histories of communities that now appear divided, and to include communities that have been excluded the region's history. By examining these coexisting identities, the national impact of the Bay Area's distinctive culture can be explored.

5. The relevance of public engagement as a form of art

Public Knowledge will involve collaboration between humanities scholars and artists, specifically artists whose medium is not painting or sculpture, but public engagement. This mode of art making has existed since the 1960s (in the work of Joseph Beuys or Allan Kaprow, for example) but has become much more prevalent since 2000. It is nevertheless not widely recognized as a form of contemporary art, partially because it can take many different guises and is harder to exhibit in traditional galleries. Artists working in these modes rely on humanities research. They need an expanded knowledge base and an understanding of social relationships that very often become part of the work itself. Public Knowledge aims to broaden awareness of public engagement as a form of art with emphasis on the role of artists as researchers into the contemporary dynamics of public life and as the creators of visions of new social possibilities.

These topics contain critical questions affecting the lives of residents who are experiencing gentrification and other forms of urban change in contemporary San Francisco. Through Public Knowledge we will animate public archives in order to animate conversations about key issues, learn from traditional and non-traditional knowledge holders, and provide resources and structures for people eager to share their cultural knowledge.

Audiences will learn about the humanities themes through the community conversations, public talks and artist projects, challenging widespread exclusion when it comes to access to knowledge and cultural participation. They will learn about creating connections and leveraging collective resources, both those in the institutions (libraries, museums) and among themselves; about the impact of history on the present, in terms of the city as a living palimpsest of what has been before, and as a living ecology of relating parts.

Ideally participation in Public Knowledge programs and projects will: allow for critical thinking and creative research; spark civic imagination and opportunities to articulate the kind of civic culture we want to be a part of; generate a new sense of belonging, prompting audiences to ask their own questions, debate answers and share their own stories; prompt reflection on and interest in the future life of the city.

Public Knowledge is designed to connect people who are asking cutting edge questions in their fields and ask them to think together about urgent public issues with broad audiences. Eight scholars have been selected to be advisors and key participants in Public Knowledge on the basis of their work related to the five stated humanities themes, their commitment to reaching a wider, non-academic public, and their interest in a space of public inquiry that can be opened by the partnership between SFMOMA and SFPL.

D. Project Formats

The Public Knowledge Artist Projects will include:

- Josh Kun will create an interactive installation and public program using the popular music archives of the SFPL that fosters cultural memory
- Stephanie Syjuco will create an interactive work with community members that circulates unrecorded knowledge necessary for survival in today's San Francisco
- Bik Van der Pol will focus on the role of libraries as places to gather the expertise of community members and reimagine their role as citizens with guided walking tours and convenings
- Burak Arikan will enable San Francisco residents to build interactive digital visualizations of their essential networks that enhance their sense of local connectivity and agency

The formats adopted by these projects and accompanying programs with scholars will include:

- Fieldwork: Community Research Workshops around the humanities themes at branches of the SFPL in which participating artists, scholars, local knowledge holders and audience representatives contribute perspectives and are informed by each other's learning. Artist-Led Research Workshops in which artists engage in project-specific research with San Francisco residents.
- Presentations: Talks, town hall discussions and participatory exhibitions at SFPL branches and SFMOMA, in which the public learns about and can contribute to the findings of Public Knowledge. This includes the Public Knowledge Forum, comprised of multiple public events, in which scholars and artists share thinking developed over the course of the project and engage in conversation with other invited speakers.
- Synthesis and Dissemination: Publications (online, broadcast, and in print), including contributions by humanities scholars

E) Project resources

The Daniel E. Koshland San Francisco History Center at SFPL's Main library branch will be a significant resource for the project. The History Center holds archival collections pertaining to the history of the City and, to a lesser extent, to the San Francisco Bay Area and California. As the official Archives for the City and County of San Francisco, it offers access to archival records from San Francisco Police, Public Health, Public Works, and other City departments and agencies, along with Mayoral papers.

Also of relevance is the Main branch's SF Historical Photograph Collection which contains photographs and works on papers of San Francisco and California scenes ranging from 1850 to the present. This collection includes views of San Francisco street scenes, buildings, and neighborhoods, as well as photographs of famous San Francisco personalities. The collection consists mostly of the photo morgue of the San Francisco News-Call Bulletin, a daily newspaper, ranging from 1920s to 1965. The collection also contains albums, slides, postcards, cabinet cards, stereo views, and lantern slides of San Francisco and California subjects.

Of specific interest to Josh Kun will be the libraries sheet music collection and the African American Interest Collections at the Western Additions and Bayview branches.

The SFPL system and SFMOMA are both resource-rich institutions and operate under a generous fair-use policy. For instances where this would not be enough SFMOMA's General Counsel, Adine Varah will help secure permissions or rights for key materials.

F) Project history

Strategic Planning

SFMOMA has sought to mean more to more people in anticipation of its 2016 reopening at the center of a changing city and in a transformative moment for museums and the visual arts. Public Knowledge has grown out of several years of institutional thinking, planning, and relationship building. During the museum's closure the Education and Public Programs department was redesigned, expanded and renamed "Education and Public Practice." This reflects a shift in focus from event-based activity that underscores the museum's traditional strengths in gallery art, and toward the commissioning of participatory forms of art and public engagement. The redesign, which evolved in response to the museum's 2010-11 strategic planning process, also emphasized the importance of public collaboration and partnerships to reach greater goals; of prioritizing diverse and underrepresented perspectives in programming; of creating new ways to engage people both through live programs and artist projects, and of producing compelling stories and resources to share the department's ongoing work with the widest possible audience.

Within that rubric, the Public Dialogue division was created at the end of 2013, specifically to engage the public, in particular adults of all backgrounds, in curatorial and educational programs that enable a dialogue about the role of the arts in the fabric of civic life in general and their own lives personally. In assuming the newly created role of Associate Curator of Public Dialogue, Deena Chalabi brought skills in discursive programming, collaborative research, and partnership creation and stewardship as well as a diverse humanities background.

Public Dialogue at SFMOMA has become a configuration unique among museums, characterized by the exchange of ideas, or what we've called "thinking together with strangers" after Michael Warner's idea of a public as a convening of strangers and William Isaacs' idea of dialogue as the art of thinking together.⁵ It encompasses public talks and tours; new and innovative higher education and continuing education programs; and special commissioned projects, of which Public Knowledge is the first major initiative.

With its aim to reach new and diverse audiences beyond the museum walls and to engage them in opportunities for participation and discussion, the SFMOMA On The Go period (SFMOMA's off-site programming during the museum's closure for construction) served as an ideal piloting and prototyping phase for what has become Public Knowledge.

SFMOMA On The Go Prototyping

Public programming in early 2014 around Public Intimacy: Art and Other Ordinary Acts in South Africa informed SFMOMA's thinking about working with scholars on the development of multi-faceted offsite projects, particularly in the context of SFPL. Specifically, the Chimurenga Library was a multi-faceted research project and installation conceived by the publishing collective Chimurenga from Cape Town, South Africa. Described as "an exploded history book," the intervention took place over several floors of the SFPL Main Library branch. Its subject, the connections between the Bay Area and a forgotten pan-African cultural festival that took place in Nigeria in 1977, was informed by the content in the library itself; its stated goal for audiences "to find ourselves on the shelves." Uncovered connections included over 600 keyword-related items in the SFPL collection, posters, music and 400 local attendees, some of whom participated in related public programming, along with diverse humanities scholars over a four-week period. Working with scholars and local knowledge holders, the program was able to reflect on historical aspects of the changing city at the library, and provide context for a discussion of the contemporary disappearance of African-American culture in San Francisco.

SFMOMA also organized an offsite symposium and affiliated community conversations on the topic of Visual Activism in 2014 in San Francisco's rapidly gentrifying Mission District. Developed with Public Knowledge participating scholars Jennifer A. González (UC Santa Cruz) and Julia Bryan-Wilson (UC Berkeley), it explored how artists and designers may create and use tools of social change, and how, likewise, political activists may utilize visual strategies and objects in order to confront and address social and political issues. Select responses to the symposium have been published as a special issue of the peer-reviewed Journal of Visual Culture.⁶

SFMOMA and SFPL

After Chimurenga Library, co-curators Willsdon, Chalabi and two SFMOMA board members who are also active supporters of SFPL met with Luis Herrera, the City Librarian, to discuss the shared desire for further collaboration. From a discussion of complementary strengths (SFPL's community engagement and networked infrastructure; SFMOMA's ability to work with artists and tell compelling stories), and overlapping strategic priorities, an agreement emerged to find ways for SFMOMA to reach further into the library system and engage patrons at the branch libraries and over a longer period.

The resulting SFMOMA-SFPL partnership is based on a set of affinities and complementarities between the two institutions that enables us to activate places that are already neighborhood hubs and to convene people around challenging questions where they already feel comfortable and empowered.

Relationships with Scholars and Community Partners

SFMOMA's Public Dialogue also conducted early groundwork by convening several workshops in the spring of 2015. Convening four interdisciplinary, intercultural, and intergenerational groups to exchange knowledge, skills, and perspectives, the workshops were an experiment in collective thinking. The goals were to introduce Public Dialogue as a discipline to a community of potential collaborators, to help the museum think about how it can mean more to more people, to think strategically about how SFMOMA can best use and share resources, and to have an opportunity for critical feedback. These now act as models for workshops during Public Knowledge.

These creative research workshops served to build relationships with local scholars, artists, writers, cultural historians, community activists, professors, and researchers in many disciplines. Over the years the museum has developed a strong sense of the cultural landscape and a tightly-knit network of local arts organizations, art schools, and interdisciplinary research facilities with whom SFMOMA is now developing partnerships for affiliated educational and public programming in the Public Knowledge Forum (see Project Walkthrough). All of these organizations act as hubs for galvanizing the resources and talent of their own institutions and as conduits for collaboration. Relationships to scholars and public-facing humanities research centers have also deepened during the development of Public Dialogue's newly dedicated Higher Education programs for faculty and students that launch in the fall of 2016.

Community Research and Groundwork

Public Dialogue has also contextualized its work by researching and mapping models for socially and publicly engaged creative practice and informal learning in the local and national art and cultural ecology.

What began as internal learning in the spring of 2014 became public facing in October 2015 when the SFMOMA blog Open Space relaunched with a map of cultural organizations that Public Dialogue had developed. At the same time, Public Dialogue used that mapping research to present Meeting Points, another On The Go program designed to spark community conversations, exploring surprising connections between the history of the WPA's Federal Art Program and SFMOMA. The day-long city-wide event included a series of site-specific talks with local humanities scholars and a participatory artist project by Amanda Eicher entitled Can We Talk About Art? that convened pop-up conversations about the value of art and public culture in the city.⁷ Its success lay in the mingling of experts and novices at multiple touchpoints, and the bringing together of new and old "locals" to share their civic pride and sense of discovery.

Comparable Projects

Public Knowledge not only builds on work conducted at SFMOMA but also on public engagement projects with artists at museums and libraries nationally as well as public-facing humanities projects at universities, particularly in California. The uniqueness of Public Knowledge lies in part in its combination of artist projects and scholarly contribution around a particular nexus of themes and provocations. Despite its grounding in conversation about technology as a social and cultural force, Public Knowledge does not focus on artists' use of technology, an area already well explored by Rhizome at the New Museum in New York and the Arts and Technology Research Center at University of California, Berkeley. For the artist projects, we have learned from the Hammer Museum's work around the rubric of Public Engagement, and its subsequent community-based work with artist Mark Bradford in a neighborhood of South Central Los Angeles, as well as artist Theaster Gates' multidisciplinary work at the University of Chicago that both positions public art as urban public engagement and encourages partnership between artist and scholars. Public Knowledge has also been inspired by the work of the Queens Museum in connecting to the local neighborhood with and through the Queens Library, and by the much smaller scale Library as Incubator project, which promotes and facilitates creative collaboration between libraries and artists and advocates for libraries as incubators of the arts.

Drawing on our participating scholars' involvement in several of the most cutting-edge humanities projects at the University of California, Public Knowledge adds to the work of these and other projects by synthesizing the insights of multiple humanities disciplines and presenting them to a broad public.

Pilot Public Knowledge Project

In many ways our choice of Josh Kun as both the leader of the pilot Public Knowledge artist project and a participating scholar embodies our interest in blending approaches. As a strong proponent and practitioner of the public humanities, Kun is well placed to initiate the research. Prior to the grant term, Josh Kun will conduct humanities research, Community Research Workshops, and Artist-Scholar Conversations. During the grant term, Josh Kun will debut his findings in an exhibition at library branches and at SFMOMA. We will learn lessons from his project that we will apply going forward with respect to partnerships and audience response. Over time the initiative will continue to be generative and iterative, forming a new publicly accessible network of ideas.

H) Audience, marketing, and promotion

SFMOMA seeks to expand its reach more broadly and equitably. Public Knowledge target audiences are out of school adult residents of San Francisco interested in and concerned about the future of their neighborhood and Bay Area civic life and the impact of technology on both. This includes low-income, ethnically diverse San Franciscans traditionally underserved by museums and for whom access to arts participation is limited. SFMOMA will reach its target audience by bringing scholars and artists into San Francisco's neighborhoods through its partnership with SFPL.

The Main branch, at the intersection of the wealthy mid-Market tech landscape and the Tenderloin's immigrant and homeless populations, serves a broad audience that SFMOMA hopes to engage in multiple ways over the course of Public Knowledge. In addition, the branch libraries that will be venues for artist projects and public programs are in neighborhoods that have large proportions of Latinos, Asians, Middle-Easterners, African Americans, recent immigrants (speaking a variety of languages), and low-income residents. By contrast, in the final year before SFMOMA closed, the museum's visitors tended to be Caucasian (71%) and relatively affluent (median household income of $83,110); only 9% were Latino, 2% African American, and 14% Asian/Pacific Islander.

SFMOMA will tap into the library's networks and affinity groups to identify interested participants, doing what participating scholar Jon Christensen has called "community sourcing."⁸ The museum is experienced in recruiting people who are deeply invested in a project topic; it is invested in building trust with a consistent and responsive presence at target venues and with diverse key stakeholders, in creating new networks of curious and enthusiastic participants. Artist project activities will be inclusive and porous, welcoming people in and providing opportunities to participate at varying levels of commitment.

As neighborhood residents will participate in the conceptualization as well as the hands-on creation of the projects, the outcomes will engage people where they are and aim to inspire further contribution to the public discourse.

The public humanities engagement activities will be framed in terms of topics of local concern, and will be promoted through an aggressive poster and flyer campaign within the respective neighborhood SFPL branches, businesses and social hubs, as well as on sfpl.org. Because activities take place over an extended period at multiple sites, a Public Knowledge mailing list will be created to keep participants informed about developments, events and newly available online resources.

The project's online presence will take the form of a section of SFMOMA's storytelling platform on sfmoma.org entitled Projects + Perspectives that highlights compelling narratives about Public Knowledge activities. To make the project more visible to general SFMOMA audiences, Public Knowledge activities will also be promoted on SFMOMA's Press Room webpage and museum events calendar, as well as SFMOMA and SFPL's respective social media platforms. A number of digital resources (recordings, PDF booklets, or other artist pieces) will also be available, easily downloadable, and digitally referenced to extend the project's theme of the effect of digital technologies on the circulation of knowledge. Several will be easily shareable pieces available as circulating copies for SFPL, and as free take-away pieces at SFMOMA.

A publicity consultant experienced with public engagement projects will be hired to support SFMOMA's press department in developing media partnerships and promoting Public Knowledge locally and nationally, connecting stories about Public Knowledge artists, scholars, and participants with print, radio, and online outlets locally and nationally. For example, Josh Kun will record a series of short podcasts about San Francisco's music history that could be aired as part of a repeated radio segment on Public Knowledge on KQED, the local NPR-member radio station, which has already expressed interest in covering the initiative as part of their ongoing special coverage of Arts and Social Issues.

I) Evaluation of the project's impact

SFMOMA will evaluate the project's success with an outside research and evaluation firm. Currently the Cultural Strategies Council, research, evaluation, and management strategy consulting firm, has been contracted to develop a framework for evaluating SFMOMA's partnership-centered programs within Education and Public Practice from May 2016 through November 2016. This investigation has taken a developmental approach to evaluating Public Knowledge in addition to SFMOMA's High School Partnerships and Projects and Performance in Progress programs. The evaluation includes four phases: project planning, data collection (including interviews with key stakeholders, organizational partners, and artist collaborators), research and analysis, and will conclude with a final report and evaluation framework. The purpose of this investigation is to draw out insights about the optimal character, structure, evolution, and efficacy of collaborative programming models, and the forces that contribute to or constrain their success. SFMOMA will use learnings to develop a new evaluation framework and enhance Education and Public Practice programs and partnership design processes in the future.

SFMOMA may look to the Cultural Strategies Council in a second phase of the evaluation process during the grant term. The Cultural Strategies Council could develop an assessment framework to measure public engagement with the project themes and deeper connections cultivated through its programming. Quantitative measures of success will include the number of visitors to programs and exhibitions, the number of repeat visitors, a high level of active community participation, the amount of time a visitor spends with a Public Knowledge project or program, and the net promoter score (i.e. the impact on the public perception of SFMOMA). Quantitative data about how many users visit SFMOMA's Projects + Perspectives and the Public Knowledge process site including what they view and for how long, will also inform the project's success. Qualitative measures of success will include broad coverage by media, critical acclaim among arts and cultural community leaders, and endorsements from partner organizations. In addition the museum is interested in identifying what the humanities content of this program enables others to do, the ways the museum's programs impact secondary audiences, and the effect on new or different audiences. The museum is interested in the project's meaning for its audiences: whether and how it made a difference to people's lives, and if it shifted their perceptions of what a museum or library can be. Evaluators will conduct structured interviews with participants and partners, planned focus groups, and may incentivize key participants to track their experience through a quantitative log or qualitative journals.

J) Organizational profile

San Francisco Museum of Modern Art (SFMOMA)

SFMOMA is dedicated to making the art of our time a vital and meaningful part of public life. For that reason we assemble unparalleled collections, create exhilarating exhibitions, and develop engaging public programs. In all of these endeavors, we are guided by our enduring commitment to fostering creativity and embracing new ways of seeing the world.

Founded in 1935, SFMOMA is the first West Coast museum for modern and contemporary art. Since then, SFMOMA has become a leader in the acquisition, presentation, and interpretation of 20th and 21st century art, with a collection numbering over 33,000 objects. To serve the museum's visitors and its increasingly important collection, SFMOMA constructed a 235,000 sq. ft. expansion, bringing the total museum size to 460,000 sq. ft., and reopened to the public on May 14, 2016, after a three year temporary closure. The expanded building offers 170,000 sq. ft. of indoor and outdoor gallery space along with nearly 45,000 sq. ft. of art-filled free-access public space. An audience of 1.2 million visitors is projected during the inaugural year, with a steady state attendance of 850,000 projected thereafter (a 30% increase over the pre-expansion annual attendance). SFMOMA's current annual operating budget totals $71,652,000. By accomplishing this institutional transformation, SFMOMA will grow as a museum for learning, inspiration, and interaction for people in the Bay Area and beyond.

During the past three years, SFMOMA has been “On The Go,” collaborating with a wide array of community organizations throughout the Bay Area to present collaborative and traveling exhibitions; major outdoor projects and commissioned installations; and new educational initiatives. SFMOMA On The Go programs provided access for the public to the museum’s collection and helped extend the museum’s reach to new audiences in preparation for the building’s reopening on May 14, 2016. During this time, an estimated 1.8 million people attended SFMOMA On The Go exhibitions and programming, and an additional 4.1 million people visited sfmoma.org.

In addition to exhibitions in other museums, there have been events in unconventional spaces used to engage new audiences. Most of these activities were deemed successes, including a four-week intervention in collaboration with SFPL at the library’s Main branch, yet they remained tightly curated, and on reflection there are significant ways in which they could have been taken further. This is an opportune time for the museum to capitalize on this fresh experience and apply lessons learned to expand and deepen its engagement practices. Throughout the project, SFMOMA will serve an administrative role to support the project, help connect artists to partner organizations and 2-4 project scholars, and secure necessary insurance and permissions with SFPL.

San Francisco Public Library (SFPL)

The San Francisco Public Library (SFPL) system is dedicated to free and equal access to information, knowledge, independent learning and the joys of reading for our diverse community. Established in 1879, SFPL has 28 library locations and four bookmobiles holding a collection of 3,671,633 objects with an annual circulation of 10,674,180. The annual operating budget totals $109,500,000. The library seeks to provide robust collections, services, and programs that support and promote reading, addressing 21st century literacy, in an accessible and welcoming facility. The library also looks to develop strong community partnerships to promote and support civic engagement.

In 2014, SFPL partnered with SFMOMA to present Collaborative Intervention: Chimurenga Library in conjunction with SFMOMA’s Public Intimacy: Art and Other Ordinary Acts in South Africa exhibition. Chimurenga Library included displays and clues such as signage, book tags, video, and audio for audiences to explore the library and discover narratives about artists, writers, and performers from Pan-African arts and heritage festivals of the 1960s and 1970s, in particular FESTAC ’77, the World Festival of Black Arts and Culture which took place in Lagos, Nigeria in 1977.

SFPL has also committed to the Public Knowledge project, and a formal memorandum of understanding is anticipated in September 2016. SFPL will provide the venue, infrastructure, and community engagement support for Public Knowledge.

K) Project team

Key SFMOMA Staff

- Dominic Willsdon is the Leanne and George Roberts Curator of Education and Public Practice at SFMOMA and the co-curator of Public Knowledge. Willsdon will leverage his considerable international experience as a curator and experience co-editing numerous publications about visual culture for this project. He will oversee the overall strategy for Public Knowledge, and co-curate the Forum in September 2018 and related exhibitions in SFMOMA’s Koret Education Center.
- Deena Chalabi is the Barbara and Stephan Vermut Associate Curator of Public Dialogue at SFMOMA and the co-curator of Public Knowledge. She was the founding Head of Strategy at Mathaf: Arab Museum of Modern Art in Doha, Qatar, and has also curated and developed numerous collaborative public arts engagement projects. Chalabi will oversee the operations of Public

Knowledge, interact regularly with scholarly advisors and artists, manage the partnership with SFPL, oversee editorial for Public Knowledge online publishing, and co-curate the Public Knowledge Forum in 2018 and related exhibitions.

- Stella Lochman is the Program Associate for Public Dialogue at SFMOMA. She has extensive experience as a project manager for public programs and projects. Lochman will serve as project manager for Public Knowledge, regularly communicating with artists, participating organizations, community members, and on-call staff. She will manage the Community Research Workshops, Artist-Led Research Workshops, Town Halls, Artist-Scholar Conversations, and Exhibitions.

Key SFPL staff

- Michelle Jeffers is the chief of Community Programs and Partnerships for the San Francisco Public Library. She manages the Library's comprehensive public programming; curates and creates art exhibitions at the Main Library and in the neighborhood library branches; and engages in partnerships with cultural, educational, civic and private institutions. Jeffers will serve as the main point of contact for Public Knowledge at SFPL. She will guide SFMOMA staff, artists, and scholars in relaying communications efforts and logistical questions to SFPL staff, patrons, and audiences.

L) Humanities scholars and consultants

Artists

- Burak Arikan is an artist based in New York and Istanbul. His work involves working with communities to create digital maps of complex networks of social relationships. Arikan is the founder of the Graph Commons collaborative network mapping tool.
- Bik Van der Pol is an artistic team comprising Liesbeth Bik and Jos Van der Pol. They live and work in Rotterdam in the Netherlands. Through their work they aim to understand how art can produce a public sphere. Their method entails creating opportunities for communicative activities that explore the histories of publics and places.
- Josh Kun is a music scholar, writer and curator whose work focuses on popular music and culture. In "Songs in the Key of Los Angeles" and "To Live and Dine in LA" Kun collaborated with the Los Angeles Public Library and the Library Foundation of LA and used library collections to explore, analyze and reanimate Los Angeles history and culture rendered in music, cultural ephemera and visual art. The project included a book, an exhibition, and a variety of city-wide public programs and media events. (See Kun's full biography in the Advising Scholars section)
- Stephanie Syjuco creates large-scale sculptures and installations composed of collected cultural objects and archival materials. Often these invite viewers to participate directly as producers or distributors. Syjuco is concerned with access and equality to knowledge.

Participating Scholars

- Julia Bryan-Wilson is an associate professor at the University of California, Berkeley. Bryan-Wilson teaches modern and contemporary art, with a focus on art since 1960 in the US, Europe, and Latin America. She is the author of Art Workers: Radical Practice in the Vietnam War Era (University of California Press, 2009), and editor of OCTOBER Files: Robert Morris (MIT Press, 2013). She co-wrote Art in the Making: Artists and Their Materials from the Studio to Crowdsourcing (Thames and Hudson, 2016). Bryan-Wilson is a leading member of UC Berkeley's Global Urban Humanities initiative with much of her work concerning the history and theory of art as public engagement.
- Jon Christensen is an adjunct assistant professor in the Institute of the Environment and Sustainability, the Department of History, and the Center for Digital Humanities at the University of California, Los Angeles. He is a journalist-in-residence at the Institute of the Environment and Sustainability, a founder of the Laboratory for Environmental Narrative Strategies in the IoES, and a senior fellow in UCLA's cityLAB. Christensen's work in the digital humanities often involves collaborative research that examines how the joint application of technology and humanities ideas can intersect in the real world.

Application Narrative

- Teddy Cruz is a professor of Public Culture and Urbanism in the Visual Arts Department at the University of California, San Diego, where he co-founded the Center for Urban Ecologies with urban curator Kyong Park in 2010; and co-founded the Blum Cross-Border Initiative with political theorist Fonna Forman in 2013. He was also a special advisor to the City of San Diego on Urban and Public Initiatives in 2013-14. He has taught and lectured widely at internationally renowned cultural institutions including Tate Modern in London, the Museum of Contemporary Art in Sydney, Australia and the Palacio de Bellas Artes in Mexico City.
- Fonna Forman is founding co-director of the UCSD Center on Global Justice and the UCSD Blum Cross-Border Initiative. She is a political theorist best known for her revisionist work on Adam Smith. Current work focuses on theories and practices of global justice as they manifest at local and regional scales, and the role of civic participation in strategies of equitable urbanization. Her recent projects, with collaborator Teddy Cruz, was an exhibition on social housing in the Haus der Kulturen der Welt (Berlin), and a forthcoming exhibition on "cross-border citizenship" at the Cooper Hewitt Smithsonian Design Museum (NYC).
- Jennifer A. González is a professor of the history of art and visual culture at the University of California, Santa Cruz. She writes about contemporary art with an emphasis on installation art, digital art and activist art. She is interested in understanding the strategic use of space (exhibition space, public space, virtual space) by contemporary artists and by cultural institutions such as museums. More specifically, she has focused on the representation of the human body and its relation to discourses of race and gender.
- Shannon Jackson is the Cyrus and Michelle Hadidi Chair in the Humanities at the University of California, Berkeley, where she is Professor of Rhetoric and of Theater, Dance and Performance Studies. In 2015, she was appointed to be the first Associate Vice Chancellor for the Arts and Design. Her books include Social Works: Performing Art, Supporting Publics (Routledge 2011), and Public Servants: Art and the Crisis of the Common Good, co-edited with Johanna Burton and Dominic Willsdon (M.I.T. Press, forthcoming 2016). Jackson is the Director of UC Berkeley's Art Research Center and is a member of the Steering Committee for UC Berkeley's Global Urban Humanities Initiative.
- Josh Kun is a professor at the Annenberg School for Communication and Journalism, University of Southern California, and also director of The Popular Music Project at USC Annenberg's The Norman Lear Center. He founded the USC Annenberg Distinguished Lecture Series on Latin American Arts & Culture. He is co-editor (with Ron Radano) of the book series "Refiguring American Music" for Duke University Press, a Book Review editor for the International Journal of Communication, and a member of the editorial board of Public Culture. He is the curator of a series of musical interventions for the Getty Foundation's 2017 PST: LA/LA initiative. His articles and essays have appeared in numerous scholarly journals, anthologies, and exhibition catalogues.
- Fred Turner is the Harry and Norman Chandler Professor and Chair of the Department of Communication at Stanford University. He is the author of three books: The Democratic Surround: Multimedia and American Liberalism from World War II to the Psychedelic Sixties (University of Chicago Press, 2013); From Counterculture to Cyberculture: Stewart Brand, the Whole Earth Network, and the Rise of Digital Utopianism (University of Chicago Press, 2006); and Echoes of

Ongoing

- Programs at SFMOMA in the Koret Exhibition and SFPL Branches will happen at least once a month from October 2017 – December 2018 (14 months).
- Town Halls will happen every 6 weeks, October 2017 thru August 2018.
- The Public Knowledge Projects + Perspective area of SFMOMA's website will publish quarterly updates. One commissioned graphic piece that will come out each month in between the quarterly updates.
- The Public Knowledge Process Site will be updated frequently, at times as often as once a week with project updates, and other more timely bits of information.
- A monthly newsletter will be sent out to the Public Knowledge mailing list

N) Project funding

SFMOMA has committed funding from the Phyllis Wattis Endowment Fund to support the September 2018 Forum in the amount of about $55,000. The museum has also submitted a proposal for a $40,000 grant to support Stephanie Syjuco's project from the Creative Work Fund, a program of The Walter and Elise Haas Fund that also is generously supported by the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation. SFMOMA has committed to the Public Knowledge project and will secure needed additional funding from individuals, foundations, and general operating support.

San Francisco Museum of Modern Art
Public Knowledge
Project Walkthrough

I. SUMMARY

Public Knowledge will aggregate and bring to life ideas and insights from artists and humanities scholars over the course of two years through activities that inform public understanding of issues vital to communities, culture, and society in the San Francisco Bay Area.

During the initial Fieldwork phase (spring and summer of 2017), artists and scholars will learn from audience representatives about the important issues affecting San Francisco and its residents. During the public-facing Presentation phase (September 2017 to December 2018), audiences at SFPL branches and at SFMOMA will have multiple opportunities to participate in the learning taking place around the cultural and civic impact of urban change. A final Dissemination phase collates the highlights of the initiative for audiences further afield and in the future.

This Project Walkthrough includes: a summary of the Artist Projects; an overview of the Engagement Activities which will involve all Artist Projects; the secondary formats included in the project; a sample audience journey; and a description of the project venues.

II. ARTIST PROJECTS

Public Knowledge will involve four large-scale inter-disciplinary Artist Projects that engage public communities. Each project addresses unique themes related to the impact of urban change on public culture. In addition to the advice of eight participating scholars for Public Knowledge as a whole, each Artist Project will have a team of two-four scholars who serve as an Advisory Team for more project-focused expertise.

Burak Arikan

Burak Arikan, a New York and Istanbul based artist working with complex networks, will involve communities in discussion and learning about the language of network mapping and to answer two questions: 1. How might public libraries confront the data asymmetry perpetuating new power imbalances? and 2. How might the library be redefined an institution no longer exclusively dedicated to the book or access to knowledge, but rather as a civic data store built, curated, and freely used by the communities around it?

Burak Arikan will lead a series of community activities will be held at SFPL branches to build a civic graph database on subjects that concern them. Later a database of the created graphs will be created to be visually explorable and usable by all library patrons and will be installed on touchscreen in the public spaces of library branches where the graph database workshop took place.

Burak Arikan's Advisory Team may include: (b) (6)

Bik Van der Pol

Rotterdam-based artist collective Bik Van der Pol will be researching the history of ideas around libraries as early utopian models that impacted society by contributing to citizenship through availability to sources of learning, and the current digital infrastructure and its impact on 'the urban' as a model of systematization and connectivity and connectedness. Bik Van der Pol's humanities research phase will investigate the issues in San Francisco that are impacting the urban fabric, and how libraries may be able to impact affected society as a further refining of democracy and community. In thinking about how libraries can continue to emancipate and democratize, they will explore a central question: what kind of learning is needed today, and how can this be accommodated? They will then convene an audience from around the Main branch of the library for community participation where they will investigate different forms and manifestations of expertise, and explore new and old ways of understanding the concept of

San Francisco Museum of Modern Art
Public Knowledge
Project Walkthrough

‘making public.’ This will cumulate in a script that will aim to bring their findings back into everyday life. The script will then be activated in the public presentation phase taking the shape of a collective work, public performance, publication, scripted walking tours, and further explorations of documentary, cinematic, and theatrical tools.

Bik Van der Pol’s Advisory Team may include: (b) (6)

Josh Kun

Los Angeles-based scholar Josh Kun will produce an interactive music-based exhibition and public program that bridges the educational gallery of SFMOMA with SFPL branches in the Western Addition and Bayview. The goal will be activate and create musical history in order to engage contemporary issues around gentrification, displacement, urban development, and immigration. Kun will enlist the help of a student research team from the University of San Francisco to research SFPL’s archival holdings. The same team will then be enlisted to help gather oral histories and ephemera from neighborhood musical events. The oral histories will later enter into the SFPL’s collection and a unique SFMOMA display. This research will inform the public presentation which includes an exhibition at SFMOMA and the branches where oral histories were collected that recreates the now defunct SFPL listening room in which library patrons could check out vinyl LPs and listen on individual turntables. Among the materials visitors can listen to will be archival musical holdings from SFPL and newly recorded oral histories and songs from the branch libraries

Josh Kun’s Advisory Team may include: (b) (6)

Stephanie Syjuco

Bay Area artist Stephanie Syjuco will produce an interactive public intervention entitled the Library of Tactical Knowledge. The Library of Tactical Knowledge will involve the gathering and sharing of specific forms of knowledge ranging from the everyday to the highly specialized. Using philosopher Michel de Certeau’s “The Practice of Everyday Life”¹ as a touchstone, a collective series of handbooks will be generated in collaboration with local nonprofits, produced in workshops with participants at specific SF Public Library branches. This ongoing series of handbooks will be produced with an eye toward open source methodologies, with a digital template provided for participants to fill in and format information, resulting in the printing and online publication of small, individually sourced handbooks produced under one publishing umbrella. Handbooks will be translated into Spanish, Mandarin, and one additional still-to-be-determined language widely-spoken in the San Francisco Bay Area.

Potential handbook topics and collaborative organizations could include: How to set up a DIY school in an era of rising tuition costs (partnering with DIY MFA, Bay Area Public School); How to protect your personal belongings from police seizure on the street (partnering with the Coalition on Homelessness); How to archive important family/community photos and documents (partnering with Bay Area Video Coalition, GLBT Historical Society, The Prelinger Library, or The Freedom Archives); How to start and run a storefront art gallery (partnering with Adobe Books & Arts Cooperative or Artists’ Television Access); or How immigrant communities grow traditional vegetables in small Bay Area spaces (partnering with Food First: Institute for Food & Development Policy).

Stephanie Syjuco’s Advisory Team may include: (b) (6)

III. ENGAGEMENT ACTIVITIES

1. Field Work (May-August 2017)

The Field Work phase of Public Knowledge encompasses the first sharing of the Public Knowledge initiative and community-informed research that artists will do with scholars, advisor teams, librarians, and other local practitioners as well as community participants.

On-Call Personnel Training

Venue: SFPL Main branch

SFMOMA will hold a week-long training for five on-call personnel. On-call personnel will be utilized throughout the two-year project as Public Knowledge will utilize this team for a total of 20 hours per month. The first day of training will be dedicated to understanding the initiative and four Artist Projects. The second day will be devoted to workshop and town hall facilitation. The following three days will train on-call staff on how to produce graphic recordings. Graphic recording involves capturing people's ideas and expressions—in words, images and color—as they are being spoken in the moment, and will be a key component in documenting Public Knowledge workshops, conversations, town halls, and activities during the Forum.

Research

Venue: SFPL branches

Each Artist Project will begin with an intensive research phase. As Josh Kun's research will occur as part of the pilot prior to the grant term, the subsequent three Artist Projects will be each paired with a researcher who will dedicate 120 hours to project-specific research. Local organizations will be consulted and encouraged to explore what an artist's perspective can contribute to their work in a series of three to six round-table meetings to assess for themselves what forms of instructional knowledge their constituencies find important to share out. This research phase will be documented on the Public Knowledge Process Site.

Launch of Online Publishing

Venue: 'Projects + Perspectives' site at sfmoma.org

The first phase of Public Humanities Engagement involves making publicly available a range of resources informed by humanities ideas that can inform the programs. The venue for these resources will be a dedicated section of the "Projects + Perspectives" area of the SFMOMA website (<https://www.sfmoma.org/projects-perspectives/>), which showcases stories that take the public beyond the usual public facing aspects of exhibitions, events, and collection presentation into the thinking and making that takes place behind the scenes at the museum. SFMOMA's website welcomes over two million visitors annually.

Public Knowledge will publish insights from the initiative on a quarterly basis, from May 2017 through March 2019 to amplify the themes and findings of Public Knowledge to a local, national, and international audience. Content will include: a position paper describing what Public Knowledge hopes to achieve, commissioned reflections from participants, mini-documentary videos, and other formats appropriate for a general audience.

In addition to the pieces from and about Public Knowledge Artist Projects, we will be commissioning monthly pieces including 'listicles' from advising scholars and future keynote speakers about their current research and interests, as well as infographics, and maps that help to illuminate and analyze creatively aspects of urban change in San Francisco and the Bay Area for the public.

San Francisco Museum of Modern Art
Public Knowledge
Project Walkthrough

Issue #0 (May 2017) will make public some of the most compelling groundwork for Public Knowledge and set the stage for the work to come. Issue #1 (August 2017) will include a position paper co-written by the SFMOMA co-curators and advising scholars that helps to inform the direction of the September 2018 Public Knowledge Forum. In late spring 2017 SFMOMA will disseminate a press release connected to the position paper, with special attention paid to library and art world audiences.

Community Research Workshops

Venues: SFPL branches

Community Research Workshops will invite audience representatives from San Francisco impacted by urban change to engage directly with humanities scholars whose research and thinking is about related issues for mutual learning. Community Research Workshops will include 15-25 invited participants and are a learning moment for scholars to think with the Public Knowledge artists and librarians. Ten two-three hour Community Research Workshops will be convened, two workshops focused on each of the five stated humanities themes for Public Knowledge.

The workshops will be documented meticulously by both a photographer and specially trained graphic recorder. The findings will be posted on the appropriate web platforms. A videographer will also be present as they create five-minute videos centered on each Artist Project and humanities theme.

Community Research Workshops will focus on and include:

1. The impact of urban change on public culture
 - All Artist Projects will be included
 - Participating scholars will include Teddy Cruz, Jon Christensen, Fonna Forman, and Josh Kun, and Fred Turner
2. The evolving civic role of public libraries and museums in American cities
 - Featured Artist Projects will include Josh Kun and Stephanie Syjuco
 - Participating scholars will include Shannon Jackson and Julia Bryan-Wilson
3. The effect of digital technologies on the circulation of knowledge
 - Featured Artist Projects will include Burak Arıkan and Josh Kun
 - Participating scholars will include Jon Christensen, Josh Kun, and Fred Turner
4. The complex cultural history of technological innovation
 - Featured Artist Projects will include Burak Arıkan
 - Participating scholars will include Jon Christensen, Jennifer Gonzalez, and Fred Turner
5. The relevance of public engagement as a form of art
 - Featured Artist Projects will include Josh Kun, Stephanie Syjuco, and Bik Van der Pol
 - Participating scholars will include Julia Bryan-Wilson, Teddy Cruz, Fonna Forman, Jennifer Gonzalez, and Shannon Jackson

Artist-Led Research Workshops

Venues: SFPL branches

Each of the four Public Knowledge Artist Projects will convene ten unique artist-led research workshops with 15-25 members of the public in participatory research at different stages. These participants will be recruited through collaboration with the SFPL branch librarians and community non-profit organizations invested in questions and concerns relevant to the project. The nature and content of the workshops will vary depending on the project, but all of them involve mutual learning by artist and community participants and lead to a public-facing presentation at the conclusion of the workshop series.

San Francisco Museum of Modern Art
Public Knowledge
Project Walkthrough

2. Public Presentation (September 2017-December 2018)

Public Knowledge invites audiences at SFPL branches and at SFMOMA to a variety of public programs and interactive exhibitions to learn about the changing city around them with participating artists, scholars and collaborators, and to ask questions and share the ideas that mean most to them.

Town Halls

Venues: SFPL branches

A series of public town hall-style discussions led by project artists and participating scholars, and local community leaders will be convened around key issues of concern generated from the Community Research Workshops, informed by the five core humanities themes of Public Knowledge. Ten Town Hall meetings will take place over several months with an anticipated 30-40 participants each at SFPL branches.

Artist-Scholar Conversations

Venues: SFPL Main branch, Koret Auditorium

A series of five public conversations between scholars and artists framed as explorations into contemporary civic issues will bring the questions and topics of Public Knowledge to a wider audience in San Francisco neighborhoods. The Public Artist-Scholar Conversations will last 90 minutes, and will take place through fall 2017 and spring 2018. They will be held in the Main branch's Koret Auditorium for an audience of 235 people. Artist and scholar participants will be paired as follows:

- Josh Kun with Shannon Jackson: Cultural Memory
- Stephanie Syjuco with Teddy Cruz and Fonna Forman: Resilient Communities
- Bik van der Pol with Fred Turner: Urban Innovation
- Burak Arikan with Jon Christensen: Public Data

Public Knowledge* Public Presentations (September 2017-December 2018)

Venue: SFPL branches (various), Koret Education Center at SFMOMA

Elements of the Artist Projects will be installed at library branches where projects were developed. The form of the installations and related public programming will depend on the specific nature of the projects.

The new Koret Education Center, one of SFMOMA's most visible and accessible spaces for exhibitions and programs, will be the venue for a year-long Public Knowledge public presentation that over time will include elements from all four Artist Projects to engage SFMOMA's one million visitors per year, and will be considered one of the museum's free public spaces for its duration.

The Public Knowledge presentation at SFMOMA will be dynamic in various ways:

- The Koret Education Center will showcase the SFMOMA-SFPL partnership by functioning as a temporary special branch of the SFPL, featuring materials dedicated to the project's humanities themes. During this time the museum becomes more accessible to the library's audiences engaged previously in their neighborhoods.
- Presentations will feature participatory installations based on the Artist Projects including: an interactive listening station related to Josh Kun's project; a selection of the materials created by Stephanie Syjuco and community participants; and instructions that invite audiences to contribute to the knowledge base created by Public Knowledge.
- New content will be added as the process of Public Knowledge unfolds around the city.

The Koret Education Center will host regular community conversations, 25 times over the course of the grant term, featuring scholars, artists, and community participants in Public Knowledge. Each of these programs will last 60 minutes, and will be designed to bring the ideas of the project to SFMOMA's wider audience.

Public Knowledge Forum (September 2018)

Venues: Phyllis Wattis Theater at SFMOMA and branches of SFPL

To further foster a local, regional, and national conversation around the urgent issues at the heart of the Public Knowledge initiative, SFMOMA plans to convene a public discussion event over three weeks in September 2018. The Public Knowledge Forum will be an extended public symposium centered in SFMOMA's Phyllis Wattis Theater, with additional programming at SFPL and at several partner institutions. The three-week Forum period will bring the Public Knowledge artists and advising scholars together with scholars and practitioners from multiple disciplines and fields to speak publicly in a variety of public program formats.

Audiences will have an opportunity to participate on a multitude of levels and at a variety of depths. While we will offer passes to the Forum as a whole, each public event will be ticketed separately. This ensures that the audience remains diverse in its interests. All programming will be free of charge and if overflow seating is needed, the events in the Phyllis Wattis Theater will be simulcast into the Koret Education Center.

Topics of each session will have been generated from the field work and the public programming as areas of most public need and interest are identified. This might include questions surrounding: technological anxiety, visual literacy, copyright and the public domain, privacy and surveillance, outsourcing and collaborative practices, digital citizenship, transparency, and cross-cultural listening.

Following is a sample Forum agenda:

Sample Forum Day 1 (SFMOMA)

2:30-4:00pm	Artist Workshop
4:30- 6:00pm	Panel Discussion
7:00pm	Keynote Talk

Sample Forum Day 2 (SFPL branch)

11:00am-1:00pm	Neighborhood Walking Tour
2:00-3:00pm	Open Call Presentations
3:00-4:30pm	Panel Discussion
6:00-7:30pm	Artist Presentation/Performance (Josh Kun's live rehearsal)

Keynote Talks and Conversations

Venues: Phyllis Wattis Theater at SFMOMA; Auditorium at SFPL

Five high-profile talks and conversations on Thursday evenings and Saturday afternoons throughout the three weeks of the Forum will highlight particularly creative visions from the intersection of urbanism and the arts for an audience with interdisciplinary interests. The conversations pair San Francisco-based thinkers and practitioners in the public humanities with peers from across the country.

The program could include:

Reimagining American Civic Culture in the 21st Century

Tom Finkelpearl, Commissioner of the NYC Department of Cultural Affairs in conversation with Luis Herrera, City Librarian, San Francisco

Expulsions and Migrations: The Changing Urban Landscape

Saskia Sassen, sociologist, in conversation with Rebecca Solnit, independent scholar and writer

Panel discussions with scholars and artists

Venues: Phyllis Wattis Theater at SFMOMA; Auditorium at SFPL

Nine 60-90 minute panel discussions during the Forum will bring into conversation Public Knowledge artists, participating scholars, advisory teams and additional artists and scholars invited to participate in these panels. Besides the artist projects, panels will be convened around the topics as described above. This is an opportunity for audiences to come along on a deep dive into the thematic of each projects. A Question and Answer session following the panel opens up the discussion to the room and brings the audience's voices into the debates.

Speakers may include: (b) (6)

[REDACTED]

; and others.

Presentations via Open Call

Venues: Phyllis Wattis Theater at SFMOMA; Auditorium at SFPL

These 30-45 minute presentations will run for three days during the Public Knowledge Forum. Presenters will be selected from an open call for papers and give the opportunity for others invested in the themes and topics of Public Knowledge to present about their work and thinking in a digestible format to a general public and contribute to the public record of the event. These presentations would take place in drop-in spaces and encourage a drop-in onsite audience that rotates throughout the day. In total, 45 speakers will participate in the Open Call.

Presentation of Artists Projects

Venues: White Box and Koret Education Center at SFMOMA; SFPL library branches (including Bayview and Western Addition)

To continue to reach both SFPL audiences and to include SFMOMA audiences in the ongoing artistic work of Public Knowledge, the project will restage Artist-Led Research Workshops in the context of the Forum both in the Koret Education Center at SFMOMA and SFPL branches. 15-25 participants will reserve a space online.

Josh Kun will also host a series of live rehearsals in SFMOMA's White Box theater, as well as in the public spaces of the Bayview and Western Addition branch libraries. These performances will feature songs constructed from the research and story collecting done during the Hit Parade project.

Stephanie Syjuco will host open workshops at several branch locations teaching interested audiences how to use the Tactical Knowledge template for their own purpose. These would be attended both by those interested in the symposium, but also to the more serendipitous publics that happen to be convening in those spaces at the time.

San Francisco Museum of Modern Art
Public Knowledge

Burak Arikan will present his work and conduct several civic data-mining workshops for a general public at SFPL branches, as well as at SFMOMA. These half-day workshops will be an opportunity for people who haven't been involved in the earlier workshops to learn the tools involved in civic mapping and about how related issues matter to us all. These will be held both in the Koret Education Center at SFMOMA and in meeting rooms at SFPL branches. See 'Artist Projects' section for details.

Affiliated Programs with Partners

In order to amplify and highlight the myriad activities related to the themes and topics of Public Knowledge already taking place for the public in the Bay Area, SFMOMA hopes to partner with other organizations who would develop related programming both before and during the Forum that could be promoted alongside the activities organized at SFMOMA and SFPL.

Intensives

Higher educational partners including the Arts Research Center at the University of California, Berkeley, and the Center for Art and Public Life at the California College of the Arts have expressed interest in developing affiliated public programs that complement the Forum's activities and provide an intensive focus on a particular theme or idea most important to that institution's priorities and research interests.

Open Houses/Walking Tours

Local art and humanities organizations such as the Gray Area Foundation for the Arts and the Prelinger Library have expressed interest in partnering by coordinating and hosting additional off-site public programming that highlights their work and its connections to Public Knowledge.

Other potential partners might include: the Internet Archive, Electronic Frontier Foundation, KQED, and HistoryPin.

3. Synthesis And Dissemination (January- March 2019)

Commissioned Text

Venues: SFMOMA's Projects + Perspectives site

SFMOMA will commission text from project artists, participating scholars, and involved community members. In total, 40 essays will be commissioned. The text will be commissioned for SFMOMA's Projects + Perspectives site, but could later be included in a publication about the project outside of the grant term.

Project Evaluation

Venues: All

The evaluation firm, while present and evaluating throughout the project, will synthesize and compile final evaluation on the projects successes and learnings.

IV. SECONDARY FORMATS

SFMOMA will host Public Knowledge on two main online platforms. The first is a story-telling platform located within sfmoma.org entitled Projects + Perspectives (<https://www.sfmoma.org/projects-perspectives>). This mini-site is a space to highlight text, audio, video, or photographic narratives about Public Knowledge activities. This page is intended to make the project more visible to general museum audiences.

San Francisco Museum of Modern Art
Public Knowledge
Project Walkthrough

In order to document Public Knowledge and make the process available to a wider audience, SFMOMA will establish a Tumblr like platform called the Public Knowledge Process Site to showcase the collaborative nature of the Artist Projects. This site will include: calls for Artist Project content, project updates, meeting notes, field notes, resource sharing, and unprocessed research findings. The Process Site also serves the purpose of cross-pollination between artists, scholars and projects. Audiences can discover this site on the SFMOMA and SFPL websites, as well as through targeted social media outreach, posters, and postcards at SFPL branch libraries and other partner locations.

SFMOMA will also promote Public Knowledge and share project learnings through its social media channels. The museum's Facebook page has 145,797 followers, its Twitter account has 537,000 followers, its Instagram account has 178,000 followers, and its YouTube account has 7,554 subscribers and 1,298,820 views.

V. SAMPLE AUDIENCE JOURNEY

Discover

A visitor to SFPL's Main Library branch may notice a flyer for a public talk on a topic of interest to them that is described as part of the Public Knowledge project. This topic relates to an over-arching humanities theme that the visitor relates to and is interested in exploring further. They may recognize the name of the project from an earlier SFPL newsletter, SFMOMA social media post, or from an e-communication from another community organization with which they are involved. They may ask their local librarian for more information and be directed to SFMOMA's Projects + Perspectives webpage.

Plan

Once online at SFMOMA's Projects + Perspectives webpage, they may see a video documentary of an Artist Project and read more about the initiative. If they want to learn more, they may click on a link that takes them to the Public Knowledge Process Site. Here they may learn more about each Artist Project and find a schedule of future public programs about a topic that particularly interests them. If this person decides to participate now, they may sign up online to attend an Artist-Scholar Conversation and join the project mailing list. An email confirmation will confirm their participation in the workshop and send logistical information about where and when to meet.

Enter

This person could take public transportation, walk, or drive to the Artist-Scholar Conversation. Held at the SFPL's Main branch, this person would see public signage upon entering the library that directs them to the Koret Auditorium. If they miss it, they can ask a librarian to direct them.

Participate

Once inside SFPL's Koret Auditorium, they would hear a 90-minute conversation between the artist and a selected scholar on the status of the Artist Project, the goals, and future ways to become involved.

If this is a topic that continues to engage them, and they wish to contribute to the Artist Project, this person may choose to participate in a Town Hall some weeks later. Held at a different library branch, this person would engage in a more intimate conversation between 30-40 participants, project scholars, members from affinity community organizations, and the artist.

After contributing in person, this person could turn again to the Public Knowledge Process Site to respond to an Artist Project prompt. Now fully invested, they could attend additional town hall conversations and the Public Knowledge Forum in September 2018 to hear more about the themes that most interest them in talks and panel discussions, as well as presentations by the artists about their projects.

San Francisco Museum of Modern Art
Public Knowledge
Project Walkthrough

Reflect

Following the project, this person could choose to participate in the project evaluation by giving written or verbal feedback. They could also read additional commissioned texts from Public Knowledge on SFMOMA's Projects + Perspectives webpage. Ideally, they would feel empowered given recent learnings through Public Knowledge to replicate an element of this project in their own community and further share gained knowledge.

VI. PROJECT VENUES

SFMOMA

When the expanded new SFMOMA building opened in May 2016 it included 15,000 square feet of art-filled free-access public space, both indoors and outdoors. The free public spaces are able to accommodate the largest congregations of people in the entire museum and include the Evelyn and Walter Haas, Jr. Atrium, the Helen and Charles Schwab Hall, and the glass-walled Roberts Family Gallery. A prominent feature of the Roberts Family Gallery is the new sculptural Roman steps upon which audiences can easily gather for free public programming.

Additional spaces at SFMOMA include:

Phyllis Wattis Theater

This 270 seat proscenium theater includes state-of-the-art audio and projection equipment, including the installation of a Meyer Sound Constellation Acoustic System, making it an ideal for film screenings, public presentations, or live performances. If capacity becomes an issue, the theater can open itself up to a larger audience by simulcasting into several other venues within SFMOMA, including the Koret Education Center.

Koret Education Center

SFMOMA's revitalized Koret Education Center is adjacent to SFMOMA's busiest areas and sits squarely between the museum's two public entrances. Redesigned for the new SFMOMA, the Koret Education Center holds a resource library, classrooms, state of the art presentation set-up, and exhibition-ready walls. It serves as an educational hub for students, teachers, and lifelong learners. Exhibitions in this space complement the museum's programs in Education and Public Practice by exploring public collaborations with a varied and inclusive range of makers, thinkers, and writers.

Gina and Stuart Peterson White Box

The new Gina and Stuart Peterson White Box is a uniquely flexible space on the museum's fourth floor, with a theatrical truss that supports a variety of performances, events or large scale artworks. The White Box has a state-of-the-art lighting grid and acoustics, creates new possibilities for live performance, accommodating theater-in-the-round configurations, multiscreen projections, and special installations, which may lend itself to artists thinking beyond the proscenium. This double-height gallery has a wall of windows, both to the outside and into the galleries, and can be a fluid continuous space with the rest of the galleries.

SFPL

The SFPL system welcomed a total of 6,730,268 visits between its 28 branches in the 2014/15 fiscal year.

San Francisco Museum of Modern Art
Public Knowledge
Project Walkthrough

Main

Located in the Civic Center, the Main branch of the library is not only the hub for the entire system, but hosts many of San Francisco's most vulnerable on a daily basis. Due to the large number of homeless who use the site, there is now a full time social worker on site. At the same time, since 2012 the Mid-Market neighborhood surrounding the library has been transforming into a technology hub attracting large internet firms such as Twitter and Square as well as multiple high end condominiums. This dichotomy of cultures has spurred the Main branch to embrace a goal of building 21st century literacy tools for adults and families alike. The Main branch has a 235-seat Koret Auditorium that may lend itself to live performances, guest speakers, and presentations. The Main branch also has the Latino/Hispanic Meeting Room that can host up to 100 people and five other meeting spaces that vary in capacity from 15-60 people.

Bayview

The Linda Brooks Branch of SFPL is located in the Bayview Hunters Point neighborhood in San Francisco's southeastern quadrant. The branch moved to its new building in 2013. The new 9,000-square-foot space is inspired by the history of the Bayview neighborhood, with Afrocentric tiles on the walls and panels outside that show landmarks like Sam Jordan's bar and the shipyards. The neighborhood is one of the poorest in the city and has a higher proportion of Black, Latino, and Native American/Pacific Islander residents than San Francisco overall. The library has formal partnerships with Bayview Footprints, a newsletter of community events, Black Women Organized for Political Action (BWOPA), San Francisco Office of Financial Empowerment, and the Bay Area Video Coalition.

Portola

The Portola neighborhood was originally settled by Maltese and Jewish immigrants. In recent times Hispanic, Pacific Islanders and Asian communities have thrived here and well as working-class Caucasian and African American families. In the 1920s, the neighborhood became home to at least 19 nurseries that grew the majority of flowers sold in San Francisco for many years. After flourishing for decades, many turned to growing vegetables or raising chickens during World War II, and some were shuttered or relocated when landowners lost their property to the city for the creation of McLaren Park and the University Mound Reservoir system. Now, people of every background live and thrive in Portola. To reflect and embellish this history the 6,300 square foot library features a garden that is maintained by a local elementary school, and has partnered with the Portola Merchant Association who use the library's meeting room as a place to organize the annual Portola Garden Tour.

Chinatown

At the center of San Francisco's historic Chinatown, the Chinatown branch is the second busiest branch of the SFPL system. The building was built in 1921 and remodeled in 1996 with the addition of a community meeting room and story-room available to use for programs and special events. Its holdings reflects the many new immigrants who live in the neighborhood, as well as many who have lived in San Francisco for many years. Because 82% of Chinatown residents speak a language other than English at home, the library contains a large percentage of materials available in Chinese and Vietnamese. There is also a large Asian-interest collection in English, extensive file of pamphlets, newspapers and magazine articles on Chinatown's history and issues of concern to the Chinese and Asian American community and collections of historical and academic Asian-American interest magazines and newspapers.

Western Addition

The Western Addition branch is centrally located in the Northwestern quadrant of San Francisco. While the neighborhood is considered more affluent than others in San Francisco, it is home to some of the deepest income inequality in the city with 29% of households in the Western Addition earning less than

San Francisco Museum of Modern Art

Public Knowledge

Project Walkthrough

$25,000 annually, and 20% earning $100,000 upwards with an additional 10% earn $200,000.00 or more annually. The library reopened in a new building in early 2008. In 1995 the city created the Historic Fillmore Jazz Preservation District around this area and the library's current mission seeks to implement programming to celebrate the rich music heritage associated with the Western Addition, such as the Jazz and Blues clubs of the 50's and 60's, the legendary Fillmore, the Independent, and the Saint John Coltrane Church of Jazz.

Additional Venues

While not all artists have selected their partnering branches, their choices will be community-driven outgrowths from the Community Research Workshops. Factors will include: the communities that the libraries serve, their goals for public programming, the interest of the branch librarians to collaborate on programming, and the types of partnerships already existent at said branches.

Dear Ms. Brooks:

San Francisco Public Library (SFPL) and the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art (SFMOMA) are collaborating on a new series of public programs entitled Public Knowledge, which will bring artists, humanities scholars and residents of San Francisco into dialogue with each other to reflect on the cultural impact of urban change. Several programs will engage residents from underserved neighborhoods at their local library branch.

The Public Knowledge initiative will include community conversations and workshops organized around five key humanities themes; public engagement projects led by artists and guided by those themes, developed and implemented in the context of the SFPL and its library branches. It will also include a major public forum in September 2018 comprising multiple programs at library and museum venues, and publishing both in print and online. All public programs and content will be free to access.

The SFPL's commitment to Public Knowledge includes advice on program development; permission for SFMOMA to utilize selected branches of the library system as project and program venues; infrastructure; and community engagement. At this time we are actively in dialogue with SFMOMA to finalize a Memorandum of Understanding, which we anticipate being completed in September 2016.

It is a pleasure to provide this letter of commitment in support of SFMOMA's application to the National Endowment for the Humanities' Public Humanities Projects program.

If I may provide any additional information about SFPL's collaboration with SFMOMA please do not hesitate to contact me at (415) 557-4282 or michelle.jeffers@sfpl.org.

Sincerely,

Michelle Jeffers

Ms. Patricia Brooks
Senior Program Officer
National Endowment for the Humanities
400 7th Street SW
Washington, DC 20506

Dear Ms. Brooks:

It is with pleasure that I provide this letter of commitment to serve as a participating artist for the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art's (SFMOMA) upcoming Public Knowledge project.

In this role, I will work closely with SFMOMA staff including Dominic Willsdon, Leanne and George Roberts Curator of Education and Public Practice, and Deena Chalabi, Barbara and Stephan Vermut Associate Curator of Public Dialogue to develop and implement a project that investigates the public library as a space to confront data asymmetry.

Public Knowledge projects will bring artists, humanities scholars and residents of San Francisco into active dialogue around the cultural impact of urban change. The Public Knowledge initiative will include community conversations and workshops organized around five key humanities themes; public engagement projects led by artists and guided by those themes, developed and implemented in the context of the SFPL and its library branches. It will also include a major public forum in September 2018 comprising multiple programs at library and museum venues and online and print publishing.

I am a New York and Istanbul based artist working with complex networks. I take the obvious social, economical, and political issues as input and runs them through an abstract machinery, which generates network maps and algorithmic interfaces, results in performances, and procreates predictions to render inherent power relationships visible and discussable. I am also the founder of Graph Commons collaborative network mapping platform. I completed a master's degree at the MIT Media Laboratory in the Physical Language Workshop (PLW) led by John Maeda. Prior to MIT, I received an MA degree in Visual Communication Design from Istanbul Bilgi University in 2004, and a BS degree in Civil Engineering from Yildiz Technical University in 2001.

My roles and responsibilities for Public Knowledge include developing a public humanities project centralized at SFPL, participating in a number of Creative Research Workshops surrounding my project, speaking in select public programs at the library branches and at SFMOMA before and during the Public Knowledge Summit and Forum. My work will focus particularly on the following themes: the cultural impact of urban change; and the relevance of public engagement as a form of art.

If I can provide any additional information, please contact me at

Sincerely,

Bik Van der Pol

Bik Van der Pol have worked collectively since 1995. They live and work in Rotterdam (NL). Through their practice they aim to articulate and understand how art can produce a public sphere, and to create space for speculation and imagination. This includes forms of mediation through which publicness is not only defined but also created. Their working method is based on co-operation and research methods of how to activate situations as to create a platform for various kinds of communicative activities.

Bik Van der Pol's mode of working consists of setting up the conditions for encounter, where they develop a process of working that allow for continuous reconfigurations of places, histories and publics. Their practice is collaborative where dialogue is used as a mode of transfer, understood in its etymological meaning of "a speech across or between two or more people, out of which may emerge new understandings" or "passing through". In fact, they consider the element of "passing through" as vital. It is temporal, implying action and the development of new forms of discourse. Their collaborative practice is both instigator and result of this method.

AGREEMENT FOR PERFORMANCE COMMISSION, PHASE I

This Agreement is made by and between the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art ("SFMOMA") and Bijl Van der Pol ("Artist").

The Public Dialogue portfolio at SFMOMA invites the Artist to develop a public art project for the Public Knowledge curatorial platform. This contract will serve as phase 1 of an ongoing Public Dialogue commission that will be presented in multiple parts upon the launch of Public Knowledge in 2016. The Artist will work with Deena Chalabi, SFMOMA's Barbara and Stephan Vermut Associate Curator for Public Dialogue, to craft the conceptual framework for the Commission and its place in the overall SFMOMA Public Knowledge program. The Artist will also work with Public Dialogue Associate Stella Lochman to help produce the work moving forward.

The Artist will be responsible for completing the Commission in accordance with the schedule set forth in this Agreement, in return for full payment of the fees set forth herein as the Artist of the Commission. The Artist understands that neither this Agreement nor any action by SFMOMA shall be construed as either apparent or actual authority to in any way bind SFMOMA to third parties.

All invoices and other written documentation required as part of this Agreement should be delivered to Stella Lochman.

Separate contracts for Phase 2, in SFMOMA's FY17, and Phase 3, in SFMOMA's FY18, will be forth coming upon completion of Phase 1.

1. PROJECT DESCRIPTION

The Project Description shall become part of the final Agreement, included as Exhibit A.

With SFMOMA's countersignature of Exhibit A described above, SFMOMA acknowledges that the Artist has taken into consideration several criteria, including cost, space availability, equipment needs, third party permissions, and the Commission's consistency with the curatorial focus of the Public Knowledge program.

2. PRODUCTION BUDGET

SFMOMA agrees to a Phase I production budget of $5,100 for the conceptualization of the Commission.

All expenses, other than those SFMOMA has agreed to cover under this Agreement, to produce and deliver the Commission beyond the agreed upon amount are the responsibility of the Artist.

3. LEGAL

The Artist shall be an independent contractor during the period under this Agreement and not an employee of SFMOMA.

In perpetuity, the Artist does hereby and shall represent and warrant that the Commission does not infringe any third party's copyright or other intellectual property rights.

The Artist shall obtain all necessary rights from, and shall pay any royalties or fees claimed by, any third party with regard to any copyright protected works in any material provided by the Artist to SFMOMA in connection with the creation of the Commission. The Artist shall promptly provide copies of any documentation relating to such works upon SFMOMA's request.

The Artist agrees to defend, indemnify, keep, and hold harmless SFMOMA from and against any and all liabilities, losses, damages, settlements, claims, actions, suits, penalties, fines, costs or expenses (including without limitation, reasonable attorneys' fees and other expenses of litigation) arising in connection with the Commission, with any breach of this Agreement, or arising directly or indirectly out of the Artist's or the Artist's assistants' activities hereunder.

The Artist shall and does hereby release SFMOMA from any and all claims, demands, liabilities, or causes of action whether now known or unknown, based upon or relating to the Agreement, including, but not limited to, the Commission.

SFMOMA shall have the right to post any legal notices on or in the Commission and shall waive any right to contest such notice and shall and hereby do waive any moral rights that are implicated by such notices, including the Artist's right to non-alteration of its fine art enshrined in the California Art Preservation Act.

4. OWNERSHIP AND ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The copyright of the Commission will be retained entirely by the Artist. SFMOMA shall assign (or cause to be assigned) and does hereby assign fully to the Artist any copyrights or other intellectual property rights relating to the Commission.

SFMOMA retains the right to accession for its Permanent Collection any art objects generated for the Commission, with the production costs outlined in Section 2 and Exhibit B applied toward the purchase price.

SFMOMA asks that the Artist acknowledge that current and future iterations of this commissioned work be credited in a mutually agreed upon fashion.

5. CANCELLATION

In the event the Artist is unable, for any reason, to conceive, research, or create the Commission as agreed upon (other than the inability of SFMOMA to perform hereunder), the Artist shall return to SFMOMA any unspent money received by the Artist to date.

6. REPRODUCTIONS AND PHOTOGRAPHS

The Artist shall permit SFMOMA to photograph or record the Commission and grants SFMOMA a worldwide, non-exclusive, royalty-free, perpetual license to copy, use, distribute, perform, display, or otherwise exploit the resulting materials, without restrictions, in any media whether now known or hereafter devised, for archival, educational, promotional, marketing, web-site, and such other purposes as SFMOMA shall determine. Such materials shall be the property of SFMOMA and the Commission will be credited in a mutual agreement.

SFMOMA may seek additional funding from individuals, foundations, and corporations. In all cases, without exception, any funding secured by SFMOMA must be acknowledged after the credit line above.

SFMOMA shall permit the Artist to have free access and use all documentation for her own archival, educational, promotional, marketing, web-site, and such other purposes as she shall determine. The documentation cannot be used for sale. The documentation will need to use the credit line formula above.

7. CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION

The Artist acknowledges that during the course of this Agreement, the Artists may have access to and come into contact with Confidential Information of SFMOMA. Confidential Information shall include, without limitation, all information related to the Public Dialogue Commission and the business of SFMOMA. During the term of this Agreement, the Artist shall not reproduce, use, duplicate, distribute, disclose or otherwise disseminate any Confidential Information or any physical embodiments thereof (for example, documents) except to the extent necessary to complete the project. Upon request by SFMOMA and in any event upon termination of the Agreement for any reason, the Artist shall promptly deliver to SFMOMA all property belonging to SFMOMA including, without limitation, any Confidential Information then in its custody, control or possession. The terms of this Section will also apply to any Confidential Information revealed to SFMOMA by the Artist.

8. SUCCESSORS AND ASSIGNS

This Agreement shall incur to the benefit of and be binding upon the successors of each of the parties. This Agreement may not be transferred or assigned by the Artist in any manner whatsoever without the prior written consent of SFMOMA.

9. CONCLUSION AND GOVERNING LAW

This Agreement represents the entire mutual understanding of the parties hereto, and supersedes and replaces all prior documents, correspondence, conversations and other written or oral understandings related to the Agreement. This Agreement may only be modified, assigned or transferred in writing, with signatures from all parties.

This Agreement shall be governed by and construed in accordance with the laws of the State of California. Any disputes arising out of this Agreement will be subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the state and federal courts located in San Francisco County, California, and each party consents to personal jurisdiction thereof.

Phase I – Proposal and Research

Artist Visit - $4000 for travel including airfare and hotel

Honorarium $1,000 - for proposal, research and contribution to grant materials

Honorarium to be paid upon submittal of proposal.

Phases II and III to be determined after Phase I when full proposal is reviewed and signed off on by Deena Chalabi.

Exhibit A: Project Description

Bik Van der Pol will produce an interactive set of public programs and exhibitions at one or more of the San Francisco Public library's branches. The Artist will research SFPL's holdings, as well as other sources around the subject of their choosing. This research will lead to an exhibition at one or more library branches and a variety of public programs and events to be determined, as well as possible resources created around their chosen topic.

Phase I consists of a detailed proposal from Bik Van der Pol, as well as preliminary research in to the SFPL system, and beyond.

Proposal should consider:

- Project description outlining entire scope of project
- Proposed phases and timeline
- Proposed known collaborators and or desired communities to reach out to
- Suggestions for documentation and communications
- Proposed production budget

Full budget and timeline and details for subsequent phases will be determined at the close of Phase I.

Ms. Patricia Brooks
Senior Program Officer
National Endowment for the Humanities
400 7th Street SW
Washington, DC 20506

Dear Ms. Brooks:

It is with pleasure that I provide this letter of commitment to serve as a participating artist and an advising scholar for the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art's (SFMOMA) upcoming Public Knowledge project.

In this dual role, I will work with closely SFMOMA staff including Dominic Willsdon, Leanne and George Roberts Curator of Education and Public Practice, and Deena Chalabi, Barbara and Stephan Vermut Associate Curator of Public Dialogue and other advising scholars to develop and implement Public Knowledge over the two-year grant period.

I am Professor of Communication, Journalism, and American Studies & Ethnicity at the University of Southern California and director of The Popular Music Project at USC Annenberg's The Norman Lear Center. I also co-edit the book series "Refiguring American Music" for Duke University Press. My work as a public humanities scholar spans collaborations with multiple institutions and includes two recent large-scale projects with the Los Angeles Public Library, "Songs in the Key of Los Angeles" and "To Live and Dine in LA," both of which explored and activated the library's historic special collections in light of contemporary community questions and concerns. My research and writing focuses primarily on the politics of cultural connection with emphasis on popular music, race and ethnicity and the cultures of globalization. I also work as a journalist, essayist, and curator.

Public Knowledge projects will bring artists, humanities scholars and residents of San Francisco into active dialogue around the cultural impact of urban change. The Public Knowledge initiative will include community conversations and workshops organized around five key humanities themes; public engagement projects led by artists and guided by those themes, developed and implemented in the context of the SFPL and its library branches. It will also include a major public forum in September 2018 comprising multiple programs at library and museum venues and publishing online and in print.

My roles and responsibilities for Public Knowledge include developing a public humanities project around the SFPL's music collection, advising the project team on the development of programs based on the humanities themes outlined for the project, speaking in select public programs at the library branches and at SFMOMA before and during the Public Knowledge Forum, as well as written reflections for online and print publication. My work will focus particularly on the following themes: the cultural impact of urban change; the effect of digital technologies on the circulation of knowledge; and the relevance of public engagement as a form of art.

If I can provide any additional information, please contact me at (b) (6) or at jkun@usc.edu.

Sincerely,

Ms. Patricia Brooks
Senior Program Officer
National Endowment for the Humanities
400 7th Street SW
Washington, DC 20506

Dear Ms. Brooks:

It is with pleasure that I provide this letter of commitment to serve as a participating artist for the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art's (SFMOMA) upcoming Public Knowledge project.

In this role, I will work closely with SFMOMA staff including Dominic Willsdon, Leanne and George Roberts Curator of Education and Public Practice, and Deena Chalabi, Barbara and Stephan Vermut Associate Curator of Public Dialogue to develop and implement "The Library Of Tactical Knowledge".

Public Knowledge projects will bring artists, humanities scholars and residents of San Francisco into active dialogue around the cultural impact of urban change. The Public Knowledge initiative will include community conversations and workshops organized around five key humanities themes; public engagement projects led by artists and guided by those themes, developed and implemented in the context of the SFPL and its library branches. It will also include a major public forum in September 2018 comprising multiple programs at library and museum venues and online and print publishing.

In my practice I create large-scale spectacles of collected cultural objects, cumulative archives, and temporary vending installations, often with an active public component that invites viewers to directly participate as producers or distributors. Born in the Philippines, I received my MFA from Stanford University and BFA from the San Francisco Art Institute. I was the recipient of a 2014 Guggenheim Fellowship Award and a 2009 Joan Mitchell Painters and Sculptors Award.

A long-time educator, I most recently joined the faculty at the University of California at Berkeley in January 2014 as an Assistant Professor in Sculpture. At Berkeley I am working to expand a conceptual and materials-based pedagogy, combining methods of the handcrafted with digital technologies and social engagement in order to speak of the frictions within late-capitalist society.

My roles and responsibilities for Public Knowledge include developing a public humanities project centralized at SFPL, participating in a number of Creative Research Workshops surrounding my project, speaking in select public programs at the library branches and at SFMOMA before and during the Public Knowledge Summit and Forum. My work will focus particularly on the following themes: the cultural impact of urban change; and the relevance of public engagement as a form of art.

If I can provide any additional information, please contact me at

Sincerely,

Julia Bryan-Wilson

Associate Professor, Modern and Contemporary Art

Ph.D., University of California, Berkeley, 2004

B.A., Swarthmore College, 1995

Associate Professor Julia Bryan-Wilson teaches modern and contemporary art, with a focus on art since 1960 in the US, Europe, and Latin America. Her research interests include theories of artistic labor, feminist and queer theory, performance, craft histories, photography, video, visual culture of the nuclear age, and collaborative practices. She is the author of Art Workers: Radical Practice in the Vietnam War Era (University of California Press, 2009), and editor of OCTOBER Files: Robert Morris (MIT Press, 2013). With Glenn Adamson, she co-wrote Art in the Making: Artists and Their Materials from the Studio to Crowdsourcing (Thames & Hudson, 2016). Her book on textiles since the 1970s, Fray: Art and Textile Politics, is forthcoming from the University of Chicago Press, and she is working on a project about Louise Nevelson. With Andrea Andersson, she is the co-curator of Cecilia Vicuña: About to Happen, which opens at the Contemporary Arts Center New Orleans in 2017.

A scholar and a critic, Bryan-Wilson has written articles that have appeared in Art Bulletin, Art Journal, Artforum, Bookforum, Cabinet, Camera Austria, Camera Obscura, differences, Frieze, Grey Room, October, Parkett, the Journal of Modern Craft, and Oxford Art Journal, and many other venues. Her article "Invisible Products" received the 2013 Art Journal Award from the College Art Association. Bryan-Wilson has held fellowships from the Clark Art Institute, the Henry Moore Institute, the Smithsonian Archives of American Art, and the Getty. She was a recipient of a Creative Capital/Andy Warhol Foundation Arts Writers Grant, and has won several awards for her teaching. She was the Terra Foundation Visiting Professor of American Art at the Courtauld Institute of Art in Spring 2014, and from fall 2014 to spring 2015 she was a Townsend Center for the Humanities Associate Professor Fellow. In 2017 she will be a Visiting Senior Fellow at the Center for Advanced Study in the Visual Arts at the National Gallery in Washington, DC.

Bryan-Wilson is an affiliate of the Art Practice Department, the Arts Research Center, the Designated Emphasis in Critical Theory, and the Designated Emphasis in Gender, Women, and Sexuality. Before coming to UC Berkeley in fall 2011, she taught at the Rhode Island School of Design and at UC Irvine.

As an adjunct assistant professor in the Department of History, the Center for Digital Humanities, and the Institute of the Environment and Sustainability at the University of California, Los Angeles, and a senior fellow in UCLA's cityLAB, I am qualified and enthusiastic to serve as an advising humanities scholar for Public Knowledge. I am also a partner and strategic adviser at Stamen Design, a San Francisco-based interactive design studio specializing in cartography and data visualization. And I organized a large collaborative project to crowd-source a new, public environmental history of the Bay Area with libraries, museums, archives, nonprofit organizations, scholars, researchers, the media, and the public during the Year of Bay in 2013.

Public Knowledge projects will bring artists, humanities scholars and residents of San Francisco into active dialogue around the cultural impact of urban change. The Public Knowledge initiative will include community conversations and workshops organized around five key humanities themes. Public engagement projects will be led by artists, guided by those themes, and developed and implemented in the context of the San Francisco Public Library and its library branches around the city. My advice will focus particularly on the following themes: the impact of urban change on public culture, the effects of digital technologies on the circulation of knowledge, and the complex cultural history of technological innovation.

If I can provide any additional information, please contact me at 650-759-6534 or jonchristensen@ioes.ucla.edu.

Teddy Cruz

Professor, Public Culture and Urbanism, Visual Arts Department, University of California, Santa Cruz

Director, UCSD Center for Urban Ecologies

Co-director, UCSD-Blum Cross-Border Initiative, University of California, San Diego

Co-Director, Civic Innovation Lab, City of San Diego

Teddy Cruz is recognized internationally for his urban research of the Tijuana-San Diego border, advancing border immigrant neighborhoods as sites of cultural production, and to rethink urban policy, affordable housing and civic infrastructure. His investigation of this geography of conflict has inspired a practice and pedagogy that emerges from the particularities of this bicultural territory and the integration of theoretical research, pedagogy and design production. He convenes knowledges from across the fields of architecture and urbanism, environmental and social practice, political theory and urban policy, visual arts and public culture, and mediates the interface between top-down institutions (governments, universities, foundations) and bottom-up socio-economic, cultural and environmental intelligence embedded in communities.

Cruz began studying architecture at Rafael Landivar University in Guatemala City and continued his studies at California State Polytechnic University San Luis Obispo (B.Arch). He completed his architectural education at Harvard University GSD (M.Des.S.) and established his San Diego research-based architectural practice, estudio teddy cruz in 2000. From 1994 to 2000 he was founding director of the LA/LA Latin America / Los Angeles studio, an experimental workshop at SCI-Arc in Los Angeles. From 2000-05, he was Associate Professor of Architecture at Woodbury University, where he began the Border Institute (BI) to further research on cross-border urban dynamics in the San Diego-Tijuana region.

He has taught widely in the US and abroad, including the GSD at Harvard University, the Berlage Institute in Rotterdam, the Ecole Special D'Architecture in Paris, City College in New York City; the Metropolis program at the CCCB in Barcelona; the Public Interest Design program at Portland State University; the University of Anyang, South Korea, the University of Auckland in New Zealand, and the Architectural Research program at Goldsmith's in London. He has lectured at renowned cultural institutions including the Tate Modern, the Museum of Modern Art, Sydney, and the Palacio de Bellas Artes, Mexico City, as well as such prestigious keynote lectures as the L'Enfant Lecture by the American Planning Association, the 2013 Istanbul Art Biennial and TED-Global in Edinburgh.

Awards and Honors

Teddy has received many awards for his work, including the Rome Prize in Architecture in 1991. He has also received The Architectural League of New York Young Architects Forum Award and the Robert Taylor Teaching Award from the ACSA. In 2004-05 he was the first international recipient of The James Stirling Memorial Lecture On The City Prize, sponsored by the CCA in Montreal and the London School of Economics. In 2006, he was selected as one of eight "Emergent Voices" in architecture by the Urban League in New York City and received the second Prize in The Third Rotterdam Architecture Biennial. In 2011, he received a US Artist award and became a United States Artist Fellow; received a "Global Award for Sustainable Architecture," by the French National Museum of Architecture in partnership with the UNESCO; and was selected by the FORD Foundation to receive their "Visionary Leader Award." Most recently, he was named one of the 50 Most Influential Designers in America by Fast Company Magazine and received the 2013 Architecture Award from the Academy of Arts and Letters in New York City.

Civic Engagement

Teddy has been involved in many civic and cultural advocacy groups at local, national and international scales. He has been member of board of directors of C-3, one of San Diego's oldest advisory citizen groups on urban and environmental policies. He was formerly a member of the board of directors of San Diego's Center City Development Corporation. He was on the advisory committee for the Mies Van Der Rohe Award for Latin American Architecture and sits on the International Editorial Board of AD Magazine in London, the Board of Directors of the Buell Center on American Architecture at Columbia University, the Artists Council of the Hammer Museum of Art in Los Angeles, and the Executive Council of the UCSD Center on Global Justice, where he is also a Senior Fellow. He has served as advisor for two major exhibitions at the Museum of Modern Art, New York: “Foreclosed: The Re-Housing of the American Dream,” and “Uneven Growth: Tactical Urbanisms for expanding Mega Cities”. He has consulted various cities on issues of public space and culture, including Buenos Aires, Argentina, Medellin, Colombia and Hudson, New York. He is currently special advisor on Urban and Public Initiatives for the City of San Diego.

Teddy Cruz

Publication

His work has been published in numerous architectural journals and newspapers, including DOMUS, Art Forum, Metropolis, The New York Times, Progressive Architecture, Architecture Record, Praxis Magazine, VERB, Yale Perspecta and Harvard Design Magazine; and his writings have been included in important books edited by such prominent authors as Michael Sorkin, Bruce Mau, Rebecca Solnit, Andrew Ross, Ananya Roy, Anudarth Mathur and Andrea Phillips; and in compendia and disciplinary readers such as the Shaping The City and The Visual Culture Reader. Several exhibition catalogues have included his writing including Creative Time’s Living as Form. He was editor of a special issue on the Architecture of the Borderlands for the British Journal AD Architectural Design, and co-editor of a collection of essays on informality and shifting practices in Informal Market Worlds (NAI). He is currently completing a monograph encompassing the scope of his work in the last decade, to be published by Metropolis Books - DPA, as well as various essays and collections that link architecture, public culture and political theory.

Exhibition

His architectural and artistic work has been exhibited nationally and internationally at important cultural venues such as The Centro Cultural de Tijuana, The Museum of Contemporary Art in San Diego, The Carnegie Museum of Art in Pittsburgh, The Walker Art Center in Minneapolis, The San Francisco Art Institute, Casa de America in Madrid, Spain, and The PARC Foundation. In the last few years, Teddy Cruz was invited to participate and exhibit at the Istanbul Art Biennial, the Auckland Triennial and Madrid Abierto 2010 in Spain, the Architecture Biennials in Rotterdam, Lisbon and Shenzhen, and in 2008 represented the US in the American Pavilion at the Venice Architecture Biennale. His work was selected, among eleven other projects worldwide, in Small Scale, Big Change: New Architectures of Social Engagement at The Museum of Modern Art in New York, where he has also exhibited in numerous other important exhibitions, including Home Delivery, a major show on prefabrication and housing and in 9+1 Ways of Being Political: 50 Years of Political Stances in Architecture and Urban Design. He is currently co-producing with URBAM-EAFIT a Diagram of Political Process for the City of Medellin, Colombia, to be exhibited at the Medellin Museum of Modern Art at the 2014 World Urban Forum and the Museum of Art in Santa Monica. His work is part of the permanent architecture collections of the Museum of Modern Art in New York and the Carnegie Museum of Art in Pittsburgh.

Institution Building

In 2010, he founded the Center for Urban Ecologies at UCSD to research urban conflict, informal urbanization and citizenship culture, and to develop new forms of cross-sector collaboration and urban intervention. He is presently collaborating with political theorist Fonna Forman and the Center on Global Justice to lead a variety of urban curatorial initiatives, including The Civic Innovation Lab in the City of San Diego to rethink public space and civic engagement; the Blum Cross-Border Initiative to promote research and practice focused on regional territories of poverty; and the UCSD Community Stations, to foster corridors of knowledge exchange between the university and marginalized communities. Additionally, they are presently co-curating in collaboration with former Bogota Mayor Antanas Mockus, the Bi-national Citizenship Culture Survey, funded by the FORD Foundation, an unprecedented protocol-document that will survey cross-border civic infrastructure, public trust and social norms, to generate new shared urban policies between the municipalities of San Diego and Tijuana, as well as collaborative strategies for cross-border urban intervention.

Ms. Patricia Brooks
Senior Program Officer
National Endowment for the Humanities
400 7th Street SW
Washington, DC 20506

Dear Ms. Brooks:

It is with pleasure that we provide this letter of commitment to serve as advising scholars for the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art's (SFMOMA) upcoming Public Knowledge project.

In this role, we will work with closely SFMOMA staff including Dominic Willsdon, Leanne and George Roberts Curator of Education and Public Practice, and Deena Chalabi, Barbara and Stephan Vermut Associate Curator of Public Dialogue, other advising scholars and selected artists to develop and implement Public Knowledge over the two-year grant period.

Public Knowledge projects will bring artists, humanities scholars and residents of San Francisco into active dialogue around the cultural impact of urban change. The Public Knowledge initiative will include community conversations and workshops organized around five key humanities themes; public engagement projects led by artists and guided by those themes, developed and implemented in the context of the SFPL and its library branches. It will also include a major public forum in September 2018 comprising multiple programs at library and museum venues and publishing online and in print.

Prof. Forman is a theorist of ethics and public culture, and her work focuses on human rights at the urban scale, climate justice in cities, and the role of civic participation in strategies of equitable urbanization. She directs the UCSD Center on Global Justice, and is an advocate for deepening university-community research partnerships. Prof. Cruz is known for his innovative urban research methods, advancing border immigrant neighborhoods as sites of cultural production, from which to rethink urban policy, affordable housing and civic infrastructure. He is Director of Urban Research at the UC-San Diego Center on Global Justice. Together, we direct the UCSD Cross-Border Initiative, and are principals in Estudio Teddy Cruz + Forman, a research-based political and architectural practice in San Diego. Our practice and research convene knowledges from across the fields of architecture and urbanism, environmental and social practice, political theory and urban policy, visual arts and public culture, and mediate the interface between top down institutions (governments, universities, foundations) and bottom-up socio-economic, cultural and environmental intelligence embedded in communities. Our work emphasizes urban conflict and informality as sites of intervention for rethinking public policy and civic infrastructure, with a special emphasis on Latin American cities.

Our roles and responsibilities for Public Knowledge will include advising the project team on the development of programs based on the humanities themes outlined for the project, speaking in select public programs at the library branches and at SFMOMA before and during the Public Knowledge Forum, as well as written reflections for online and print publication. Our advice will focus particularly on the following themes: the impact of urban change on public culture and the relevance of public engagement as a form of art.

If we can provide any additional information, please contact us at (858) 822-3868, at fonna@ucsd.edu or at etcruz@ucsd.edu.

Jennifer A. González

Professor, History of Art and Visual Culture
Contemporary Art, Race and Representation

Research Interests:

Jennifer Gonzalez writes about contemporary art with an emphasis on installation art, digital art and activist art. She is interested in understanding the strategic use of space (exhibition space, public space, virtual space) by contemporary artists and by cultural institutions such as museums. More specifically, she has focused on the representation of the human body and its relation to discourses of race and gender.

Artists over the past two decades have used installation art to represent their concerns about history, identity and memory. Installation art and museum display practices have become mutually influential; many artists have been invited to produce original art projects inside museums or using museum exhibition techniques. Gonzalez's research has led to a book project on the work of contemporary artists who use installation art as a way to stage a critical assessment of race politics in the United States.

In addition to installation art, Jennifer Gonzalez has written on contemporary digital art and specifically on the visual representation of the body. Several of her articles and book chapters focus on the cyborg body or the hybrid body as both symptoms of and metaphors for cultural transformation. The visual representation of new forms of corporeality often signal a utopian hope or dystopic unease with new technologies and imaginary futures.

In my position as Associate Vice Chancellor for the Arts and Design at UC Berkeley, I am invested in connecting scholars from a variety of humanities disciplines to one another, to civic leaders and to a broader public. One example of this is the university's multi-faceted and enduring relationship with SFMOMA. I am the Director of UC Berkeley's Arts Research Center and I am on the steering committee for the Global Urban Humanities initiative, which includes scholars and practitioners from multiple fields to develop new approaches to the complex problems facing today's cities. My own research focuses on two broad, overlapping domains: 1) collaborations across visual, performing, and media art forms and 2) the role of the arts in social institutions and in social change.

Public Knowledge projects will bring artists, humanities scholars and residents of San Francisco into active dialogue around the cultural impact of urban change. The Public Knowledge initiative will include community conversations and workshops organized around five key humanities themes; public engagement projects led by artists and guided by those themes, developed and implemented in the context of the SFPL and its library branches. Ms. Patricia Brooks
National Endowment for the Humanities
400 7th Street SW
Washington, DC 20506

Dear Ms. Brooks:

It is with pleasure that I provide this letter of commitment to serve as an advising scholar for the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art's (SFMOMA) upcoming Public Knowledge project.

In this role, I will work closely with SFMOMA staff including Dominic Willsdon, Leanne and George Roberts Curator of Education and Public Practice, and Deena Chalabi, Barbara and Stephan Vermut Associate Curator of Public Dialogue, other advising scholars and selected artists to develop and implement Public Knowledge over the two-year grant period.

As Harry and Norman Chandler Professor and Chair of the Department of Communication at Stanford University and also as Professor by courtesy appointment in the Departments of History and Art & Art History, I am qualified and enthusiastic to serve as an advising humanities scholar for Public Knowledge. My research and writing explore media, technology and American cultural history, and I am especially interested in how emerging media have shaped American life since World War II. I have consulted on research projects and exhibitions at the Whitney Museum of American Art, the New York Historical Society, the Haus der Kulturen der Welt in Berlin, and the Victoria and Albert Museum in London.

Public Knowledge projects will bring artists, humanities scholars and residents of San Francisco into active dialogue around the cultural impact of urban change. The Public Knowledge initiative will include community conversations and workshops organized around five key humanities themes, as well as public engagement projects led by artists connected to those themes, developed and implemented in the context of the SFPL and its library branches. It will also include a major public forum in September 2018 comprising multiple programs at library and museum venues and publishing online and in print.

My roles and responsibilities for Public Knowledge will include advising the project team on the development of programs based on the humanities themes outlined for the project, speaking in select public programs at the library branches and at SFMOMA before and during the Public Knowledge Forum, as well as written reflections for online and print publication. My advice will focus particularly on the following themes: the impact of urban change on public culture; the effect of digital technologies on the circulation of knowledge and the complex cultural history of technological innovation.

If I can provide any additional information, please contact me at 650-723-0706 or fturner@stanford.edu.

Sincerely,

Fred Turner

User- Generated Content

Public Knowledge projects may create user-generated content for Artist Projects, but in each case the content would not be made immediately public. Content will be reviewed by the project's lead artist and curated for potential dissemination. In each case, the user-generated content will be an effort to create a larger reach for more community members to participate in Public Knowledge in an accessible way. Within the Public Knowledge Process Site any updates to the web platform including project content, updates, meeting notes, field notes, resource sharing, and research findings, would first be submitted to the Public Knowledge team for review and approval. Any obscene, libelous, indecent, or defamatory content will not be allowed onto the site. The Process Site will have similar controls in place for obscene, libelous, indecent, or defamatory comments within the site and be able to immediately remove comments.

Digital Media

- Projects + Perspectives <https://www.sfmoma.org/projects-perspectives>

To reflect SFMOMA's transformation as it prepared to open on May 14, 2016, the museum redesigned its website and re-launched sfmoma.org on October 21, 2015. Drawing inspiration from the artworks in SFMOMA's collection and its environs in the city of San Francisco, the museum developed a truly contemporary site that showcases and celebrates SFMOMA's diversity of exhibitions, events, artworks, scholarship, research projects, artist videos, and staff perspectives.

The Projects + Perspectives section serves as the locus for the museum's research projects, scholarship, and highlights on people, projects, and stories that are of special note. The site is an umbrella for Open Space, the SFMOMA blog; updates on the Artist Initiative, an artist-focused research project funded by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation; videotaped artist interviews; stories about the development of the new SFMOMA Mobile App, and much more. The online public dissemination of Public Knowledge will be accessible on a dedicated section of Projects + Perspectives.

- Future SFMOMA: <http://future.sfmoma.org/>

On September 10, 2014, the half-way point in the construction of SFMOMA's expanded building was celebrated with a public ceremony. In conjunction with the event SFMOMA launched future.sfmoma.org, a new cinematic microsite featuring immersive imagery, renderings, and video dedicated to Where Art Can Take You: The Campaign to Transform SFMOMA.

- Rauschenberg Research Project: <https://www.sfmoma.org/rauschenberg-research-project/>

The Rauschenberg Research Project (RRP) was SFMOMA's first online collections catalogue, and featured works by twentieth-century artist Robert Rauschenberg in the museum's collection. Launched in July 2013, the RRP was the culmination of five years of work, all generously funded by the Getty Foundation's Online Scholarly Research Initiative. Presenting a seamless blend of rigorous scholarship and multimedia resources, the RRP encompasses nearly 90 works by the artist in a variety of media, along with materials from the SFMOMA Archives, other museums, galleries, and the Rauschenberg studio; 20 scholarly essays; bibliographies; exhibition histories; conservation reports; and educational features.

- Open Space: <http://openspace.sfmoma.org/>

Open Space publishes three themed issues per year (fall, winter, spring), in which multiple contributors respond to a particular idea, question or problem over the course of a few weeks. Now averaging over 30,000 visits per month, Open Space has been commissioning and supporting experimental and critical responses to art, institutions and culture—aiming to expand the discourse about art in general and cast a spotlight on the Bay Area cultural scene in particular. The columnists-in-residence program continues to be the heart of Open Space program, accompanied by a new series of regular columns that address the nexus of art and technology and questions of labor, ethics, and money in the arts. In addition, Open Space expands its community-focus with a rotating spotlight on the individuals, collectives, and organizations that make up the fabric of the Bay Area cultural scene as well as a layered, filterable map of hundreds of arts organizations all over the Bay Area. The intent is to provide a comprehensive picture of the scale and diversity of arts programming in this region. Open Space relaunched on October 21, 2015, along with the new SFMOMA website.

In support of SFMOMA's Public Humanities Projects' Community Conversations request, the museum is pleased to provide a copy of a project guide for the artist project Collaborative Intervention: Chimurenga Library.

Collaborative Intervention: Chimurenga Library occurred in the San Francisco Public Library's main branch in conjunction with SFMOMA's Public Intimacy: Art and Other Ordinary Acts in South Africa exhibition (February 21 through June 29, 2014). Taking place from May 24 through June 20, Collaborative Intervention: Chimurenga Library included displays and clues such as signage, book tags, video, and audio for audiences to explore the library and discover narratives about artists, writers, and performers from Pan-African arts and heritage festivals of the 1960s and 1970s, in particular FESTAC '77, the World Festival of Black Arts and Culture which took place in Lagos, Nigeria in 1977. The project's web page may be accessed at <http://chimurengalibrary.tumblr.com/>.

Live Projects 4: Public Intimacy

February 21–June 29, 2014

Explore the unexpected intersections of art, activism, and the everyday with Live Projects 4, an extension of the exhibition Public Intimacy: Art and Other Ordinary Acts in South Africa. See what happens when South African artists and activists interject their work and ideas into San Francisco's urban structure, presenting performances, public conversations, and creative encounters that draw attention to the way small interpersonal exchanges can carry widespread political weight.

CHIMURENGA LIBRARY

San Francisco Public Library Main Branch

100 Larkin Street, San Francisco

May 24–June 29, 2014

Chimurenga Library (2014) is an installation and research project comprising text quotations, audio, video, and library materials that explore the history of FESTAC '77, the Second World Festival of Black Arts and Culture, which was held in Lagos, Nigeria, in 1977 and remains the largest pan-African arts festival that has ever taken place.

Elements of Chimurenga Library can be found at various locations across all six floors of the main branch of the San Francisco Public Library. Much of the installation can be seen in and around the atrium, the African American Center, and the Music Center, and outside the elevators on various floors, but it intervenes in many other places, too. In some ways, the installation itself acts as a guide, providing paths to follow.

Enclosed is a conceptual map, designed by Chimurenga, which acts as a guide to the installation and includes background information about FESTAC. To listen to the audio and film material, use your own headphones or pick up a set at the Art, Music and Recreation Center desk on the library's fourth floor. For more information about the project, visit chimurengalibrary.tumblr.com.

Opening Events

Saturday, May 24, 2014

The opening of the installation on Saturday, May 24, will be celebrated with a special family event in the Children's Center on the library's second floor (10 a.m. to 2 p.m.) and a panel discussion in the African American Center on the library's third floor featuring the writers Akin Adesokan and Andrew Apter alongside Stacy Hardy of Chimurenga (3 to 4:30 p.m.).

Chimurenga Library was commissioned for San Francisco as part of the exhibition Public Intimacy: Art and Other Ordinary Acts in South Africa, co-organized by SFMOMA and the Yerba Buena Center for the Arts (YBCA), and is co-presented with YBCA as part of Public Intimacy and Live Projects 4.

About FESTAC '77

Despite the epic scale and ambition of the festival, the story of FESTAC '77 is neither widely known nor well understood. FESTAC '77 included visual arts exhibitions, music and dance performances, and an extensive scholarly conference that featured the major black intellectuals of the day. An estimated total of seventy thousand artists, performers, thinkers, and writers attended, from at least sixty countries, including the United States. Although it was a life-altering experience for many participants and attendees, FESTAC received little mainstream press coverage, and most of the prominent writers who were present did not publish about their experiences in Nigeria. The festival's history is still to be written.

Chimurenga Library helps us reflect on what this event was, what it still might mean, and how it can lead us to think about our many histories of diaspora, from the Bay Area to Africa and beyond.

What Does Chimurenga Library Mean to You?

There are many people in the Bay Area who attended FESTAC '77, and many more who have participated in pan-African culture and politics over the years. If you are part of this history, or if the stories revealed by Chimurenga Library are important to you or your family, we would like to hear from you. Email us: edu@sfmoma.org. Tweet us: @SFMOMA @sfpubliclibrary #chimurengaSF.

About the Artists

Chimurenga

Chimurenga—which means “struggle for freedom” in the Zimbabwean Shona language—is a collective based in Cape Town, South Africa, that produces a pan-African journal of culture, art, and politics. Founded by Ntone Edjabe in 2002, this publication (also called Chimurenga) provides an innovative platform for free ideas and political reflection by Africans about Africa. Past titles include Music Is The Weapon; Futbol, Politricks and Ostentatious Cripples; Black Gays & Mugabes; Dr Satan's Echo Chamber (a double issue on African science fiction); The Curriculum Is Everything; and The Chimurenga Chronic, a one-off edition of a speculative newspaper. Since 2013, Chimurenga has published The Chronic as a quarterly gazette. For more information, visit www.chimurenga.co.za.

Ntone Edjabe

Ntone Edjabe was born in 1970 in Douala, Cameroon. In 1993 he moved to Cape Town, where he currently lives and works as a journalist, writer, D.J., and basketball coach. In 2002 Edjabe launched Chimurenga to stimulate original perspectives on the contemporary African experience. His other projects include the Pan African Space Station (PASS), a music intervention in venues across Cape Town that he created with Neo Muyanga in 2008. The web-based radio station continues to bring together diverse pan-African sounds from ancient techno to future roots.

Stacy Hardy

Stacy Hardy is a writer based in Cape Town. She is the associate editor at the pan-African journal Chimurenga. Her writing has appeared in Pocko Times (UK); Art South Africa; Ctheory (Canada); Black Warrior Review and Evergreen Review (U.S.); and, of course, Chimurenga, as well as in numerous literary anthologies, monographs, and catalogues. She is currently working on a series of multimedia works in collaboration with Angolan composer, performer, and instrument designer Victor Gama. A collection of her fiction is forthcoming from Pocko Books, London.

About the Exhibition

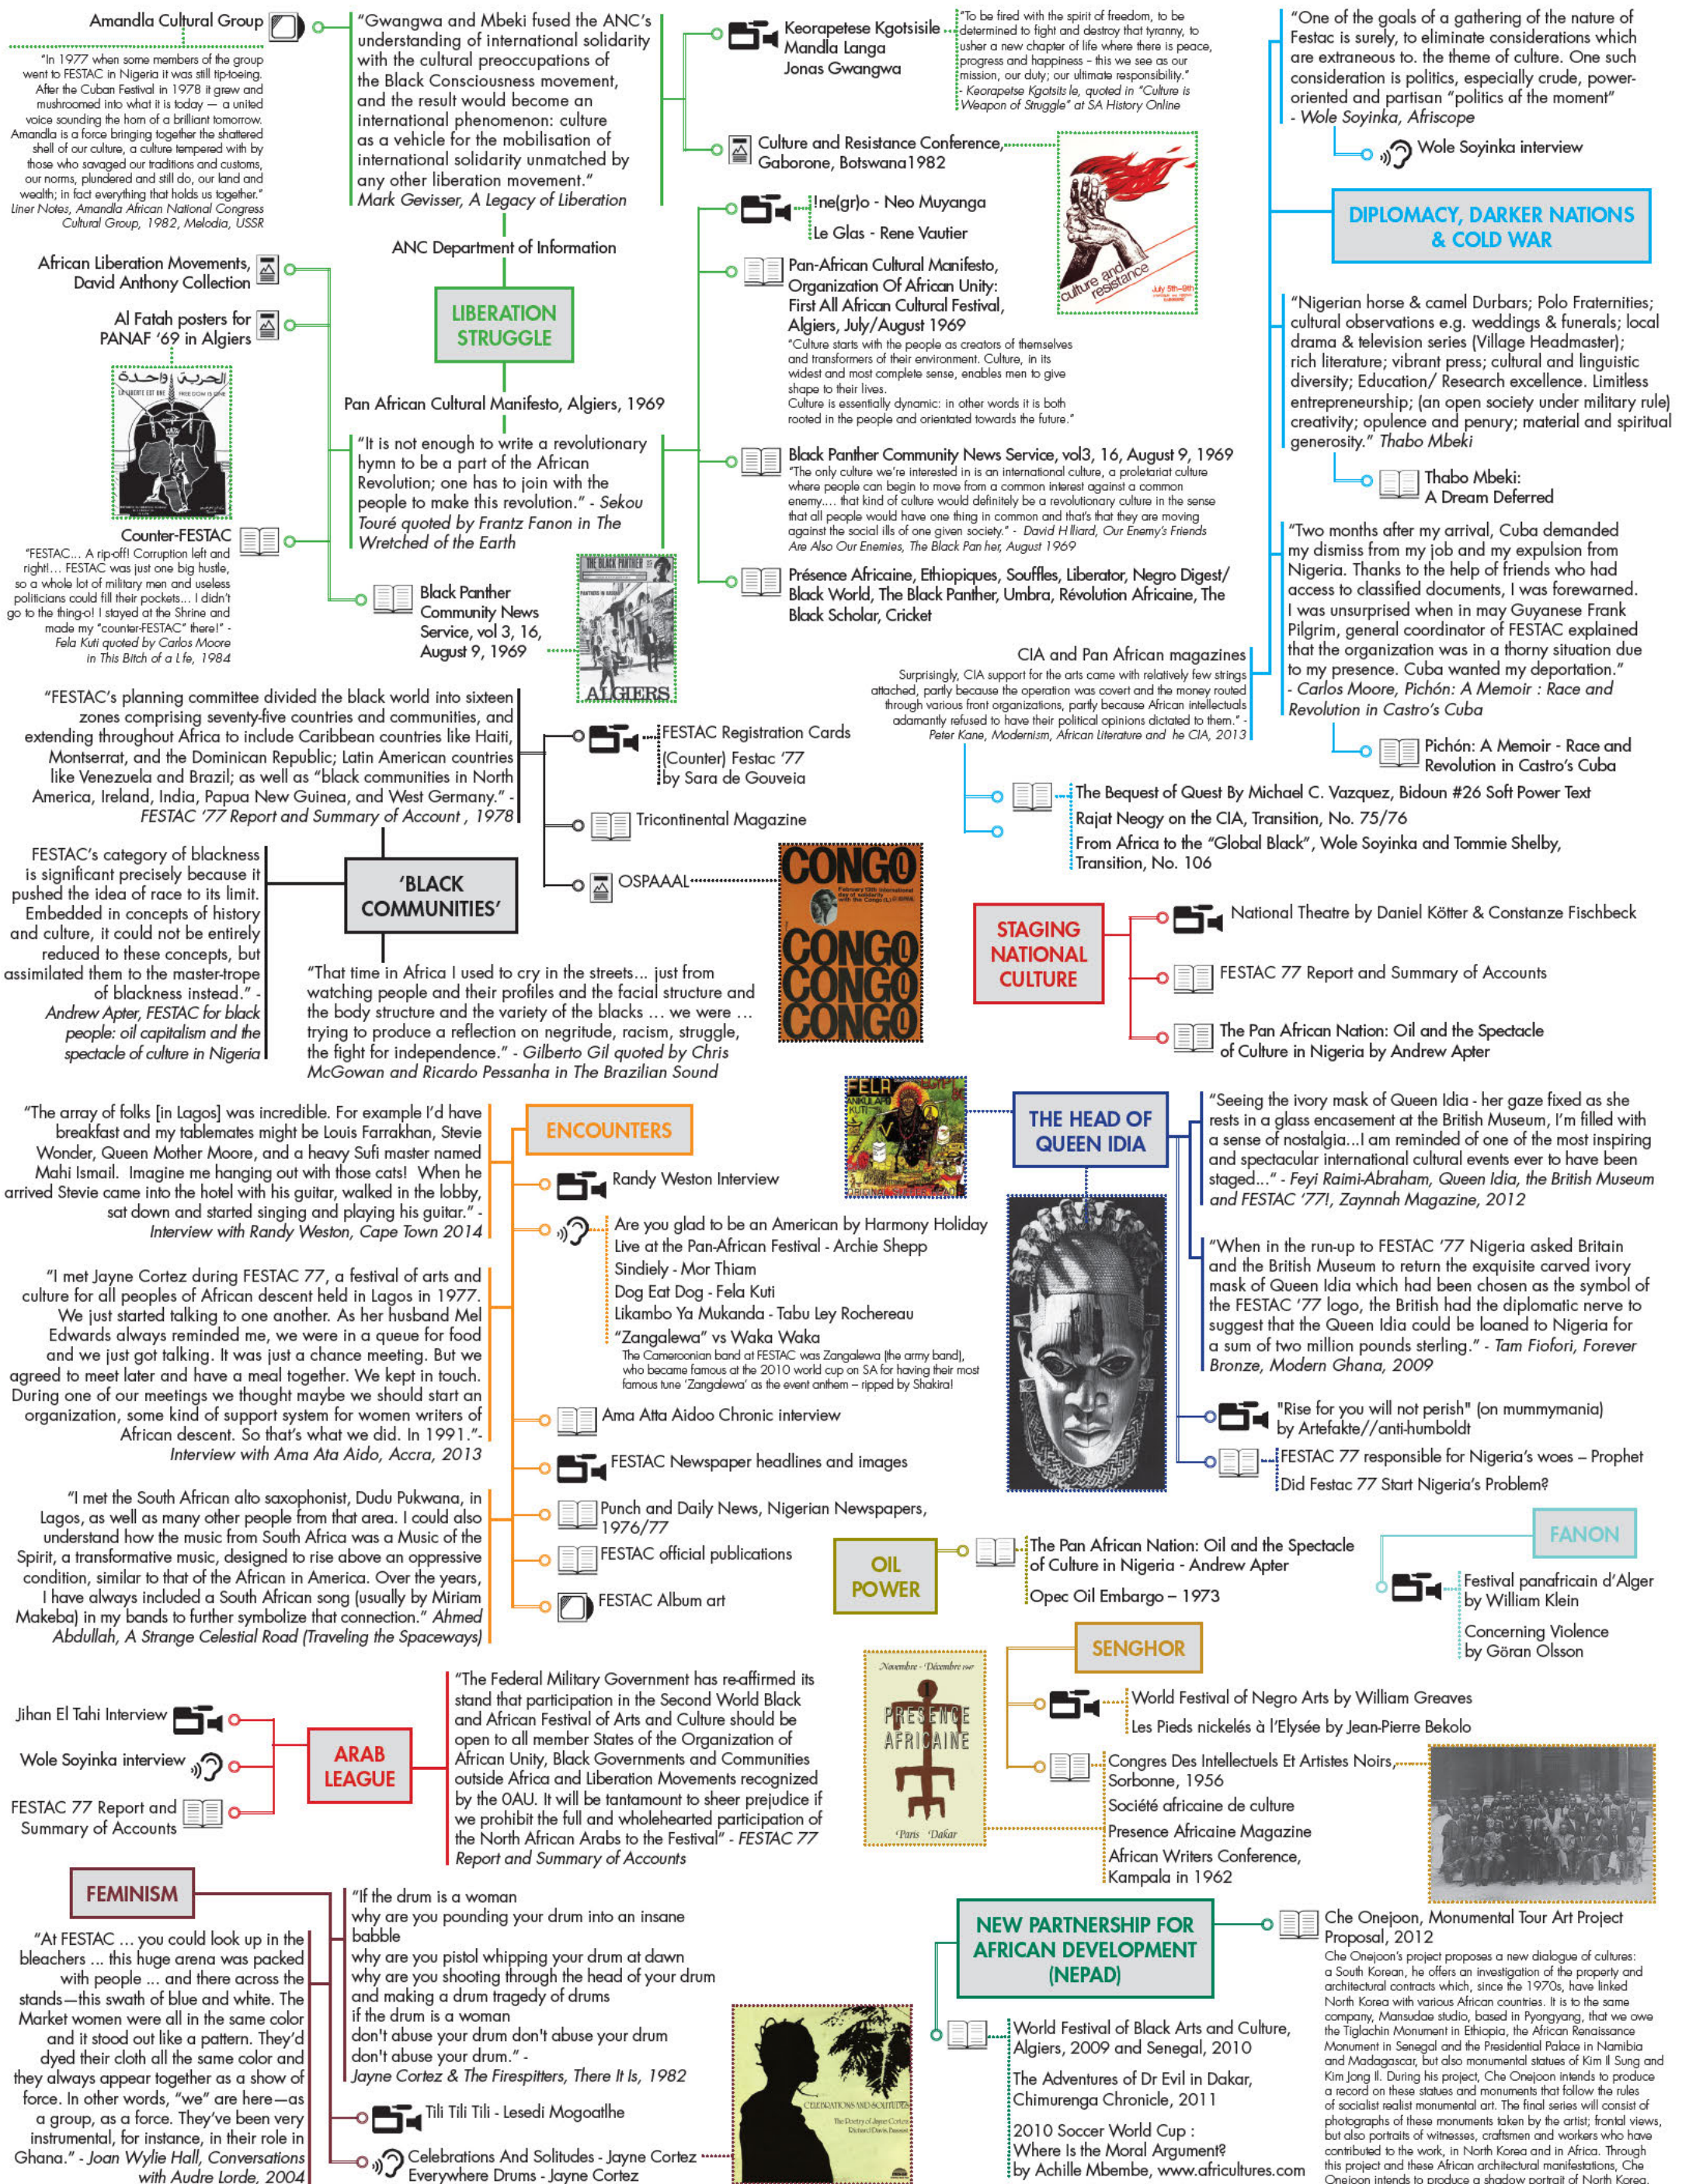

Public Intimacy: Art and Other Ordinary Acts in South Africa
Yerba Buena Center for the Arts, February 21–June 29, 2014

Disrupting expected images of South Africa, the twenty-five contemporary artists and collectives featured in Public Intimacy eloquently explore the poetics and politics of the everyday. This collaboration with Yerba Buena Center for the Arts presents pictures from SFMOMA's collection of South African photography alongside works in a broad range of media, including video, painting, sculpture, performance, and publications—most made in the last five years, and many on view for the first time on the West Coast. Coinciding with the twentieth anniversary of democracy in South Africa, Public Intimacy reveals the nuances of human interaction in a country still undergoing significant change, vividly showing public life there in a more complex light. The exhibition is co-curated by Betti-Sue Hertz, Frank Smigiel, and Dominic Willsdon.

With delegates from 57 countries in attendance, FESTAC '77 was also a freshing ground for international politics. It reflected both the ongoing Cold War and its role in liberation movements on the continent as well as the emerging global power of the oil-producing nations and the birth of the modern African state. The tensions between the General Olusegun Obasanjo, Nigeria's Head of State and Grand Patron of FESTAC, and Senegal's President Leopold Senghor who abdicated his position as FESTAC's co-patron and virtually boycotted the festival, highlighted the complex interplay

Chimurenga Library Festac '77, Research Platform 1: San Francisco Public Library (May 24-June 29, 2014)

The first installment of Chimurenga's research platforms on FESTAC '77 takes the form of a "Chimurenga Library" intervention at the San Francisco Public Library (SFPL), in collaboration with the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art.

The Chimurenga Library is an ongoing intervention that seeks to re-imagine the Library as a laboratory for extended curiosity, new adventures, critical thinking, daydreaming, socio-political involvement, partying and random perusal.

The Chimurenga Library embodies the process of "finding oneself," as South African jazz musician Moses Molelekwa put it, on the shelves of other libraries and archives; in other spaces; or quietly encroaching upon classification systems; or proposing a new navigation system, clearly subjective and affective.

This Chimurenga Library installation at SFPL seeks to present an alternative archive of FESTAC '77 (including CounterFESTAC initiatives such as Fela Kuti's Shrine in Lagos), which focuses on the US participation (and more broadly, black diaspora's) in the 1977 festival. We also use this intervention to locate FESTAC '77 inside a long history of Pan African cultural encounters from Paris 1956 to present time.

The installation does not only display or perform our research work but also joins an ongoing conversation, the daily production of culture, art and history in the SFPL. From this new base we hope to engage in research, host public discussions, film screenings and performances that engage history anew. We are interested in how the grand utopian vision of FESTAC '77 can manifest as an intimate, deep subjective space within the urban landscape of San Francisco.

In addition to archive material about FESTAC '77 and other Pan African festivals from the second half of the 20th century, the installation in SFPL features specially commissioned work by Harmony Holiday (US), Neo Muyanga (South Africa), Lesedi Mogoathe (South Africa), Sara CF de Gouveia (Mozambique/South Africa), as well as new films by Artefakte (Germany), Daniel Köster & Constanze Fischbeck (Germany). The intervention opens on May 24, 2014 with a dialogue between Festac '77 scholars Akin Adesokan and Andrew Apter.

Festac '77 is an ongoing research project: during 2014-2016, themed research platforms are planned in Sharjah (Pan Africanism and the Arab League), Johannesburg (Liberation Struggle and NEPAD) and Lagos (The Head of Queen Idia, Festac Town and National Cultures).

The National Theatre in Lagos during Festac '77.

FROM JANUARY 15 TO FEBRUARY 12 1977, thousands of artists, writers, musicians, activists and scholars from Africa and the black diaspora descended on Lagos, Nigeria, for the 2nd World Black Festival of African Arts and Culture (FESTAC '77). Held eleven years after the First World Festival of Negro Arts in Dakar Senegal, and eight years after First Pan African Cultural Festival (PANAF) in Algiers, FESTAC '77 was part of a larger body of transatlantic cultural exchange that dated back to the Pan-African Congress in Paris 1919.

Public Knowledge

Public Humanities Fellowship

The Public Humanities Fellow is a key member of the project team for SFMOMA's Public Knowledge initiative. The position works closely with SFMOMA's Leanne and George Roberts Curator of Education and Public Practice and Barbara and Stephan Vermut Associate Curator of Public Dialogue, and reports directly to the latter.

The position will be publicized via the SFMOMA website jobs service and Snap Hire, which feeds to several other sites such as Indeed.com and LinkedIn. Applicants will be short-listed by the Curator of Education and Public Practice and Associate Curator of Public Dialogue according to SFMOMA's hiring process. Short-listed applicants will be interviewed by a panel of six interviewers, comprising: three of SFMOMA's Education and Public Practice department, one from SFMOMA's Human Resources department, and two humanities scholars participating in the Public Knowledge initiative.

Position Responsibilities

The Public Humanities Fellow is responsible for coordinating the humanities content of Public Knowledge, this includes:

- Researching and compiling scholarly materials
- Coordinating and facilitating participation in the project by humanities scholars
- Coordinating the logistics of Public Knowledge events involving humanities scholars
- Writing and editing communications materials related to Public Knowledge
- Liaising with SFMOMA's marketing department to promote Public Knowledge programs, by building lists for target audiences, developing contacts with programming partners, and assisting in the development and distribution of promotional materials particularly to colleges and universities
- Liaise with the wider academic community in relation to Public Knowledge, working closely with SFMOMA's program associate for higher and continuing education
- Working with SFMOMA's Content Strategy and Digital Engagement team and SFPL to implement a dissemination and publication plan for research content generated by Public Knowledge
- Contributing to the ongoing evaluation of Public Knowledge

Goals of the Position

- To ensure success in the implementation of the public-facing work of the humanities scholars participating in Public Knowledge by serving as their primary liaison with the museum, SFPL, and community partners
- To integrate the implementation of Public Knowledge programs involving humanities scholars with the work processes of SFMOMA
- To help nurture a culture and practice of the public humanities at SFMOMA

Candidate profile

The successful candidate is likely to be a recent graduate in the Humanities (e.g. in art history, cultural studies, literature, history, political philosophy, architecture and urban studies, or a similar discipline) with a commitment to reaching broad and diverse audiences. S/he should also have some experience and interest in organizing public cultural events.

The position sits within the Public Dialogue team at SFMOMA -- a division of Education and Public Practice. Deepening the commitment to fostering conversations about the role of contemporary art and museums, Public Dialogue at SFMOMA encourages exploration, experimentation, and in-depth critical engagement by artists, scholars, local civic organizations, and the public. The department seeks to build new relationships among the Bay Area's diverse communities through citywide collaborative projects and commissions, and a major symposium on a cutting-edge theme each year. Public Dialogue also hosts dynamic programming for adult learners related to the museum's collection and exhibitions, including interactive gallery tours, talks, classes, workshops, and more.
